CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTY-NINTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

SURPLUS - 1
LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
DUPLICATE

by the gentleman from Kansas. It is to strike out section 4. Now, what is the language of section 4? I ask you to observe it. It is:

SEC. 4. That the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization is authorized from time to time to make or cause to be made by an agent or agents of such Bureau examinations of the methods employed in naturalization proceedings by any court or courts.

"Examination of the methods * * * in courts!" Now, if there ever was a line written in a statute book absolutely subversive of the idea of keeping up a distinction between the judicial and executive power under the Government it is that. Here is an underling from an executive bureau, or the chief of it if you please, armed by statute with the power representing the executive to examine into the methods of the judicial power in attending to its duty.

Think of that just a moment before we go any further! He can go into a Federal court as well as a State court, and he must do it "within business hours," for that amendment has been accepted; he can march in there while the court is in session and proceed to examine and find out whether, in the view of the executive department, the judicial department has performed its duty, whether "its methods employed" meet with his approval, and then report for the august approval of the executive Department of Commerce and Labor.

I don't know exactly what is to happen if it doesn't, nor how it is to be made to happen.

"To ascertain the method of procedure and report." Now, for what purpose? In order that the bureau chief may criticise the judiciary department of this Government for its laxity, perhaps, in attending to its duty, or deal out its praises to those judges who please it. It is as much to be presumed, Mr. Chairman, that the judiciary department of the Government is going to do its duty as it is that the executive department of the Government is going to do its duty, and hitherto we have never permitted the courts to crawl around and make examinations of the methods pursued in executive departments, except when somebody connected with the executive department was accused of a crime, when the examining was done in the court room; nor have we permitted the executive department to make themselves the supervisors, inspectors, and judges of the methods of procedure of the judiciary department.

Mr. Chairman, I think there ought to be a bill amending the present naturalization laws. The law itself ought to be amended, but if you can not amend a naturalization law effectively and properly without breaking down the judicial branch of the Government by the intrusion under the forms of law of the executive to examine and supervise them, examine their methods, and report upon them, then I would rather have no naturalization law at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that since this paragraph has been amended by taking out what to me seems to be the only objectionable part, the arguments of the gentleman from Mississippi, as well as the argument of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], is left without any foundation. The gentlemen assume, in the first place, that when they undertake, as the bill provides here in section 4, "examinations of the methods employed," that that examination is made for the purpose of finding fault with what the court has done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman misunderstood me, if he understood me to say that.

Mr. NORRIS. His argument seemed to me to be based entirely on that hypothesis.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. The examination is made for the purpose of reporting, is it not?

Mr. NORRIS. I presume it is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, in his report he must either criticise or praise.

Mr. NORRIS. Not necessarily; but what if he does criticise or praise? It may be that he will do either. We ought not assume to begin with that it is made for the purpose of finding fault or praising anybody. It may be the examination is made for the purpose of more light by the bureau for the purpose of diffusing information, and perhaps for the purpose of getting information in such a way that there may be a similarity of proceeding in this regard all over the country—tabulate it, or something of that kind.

Mr. MANN. Would not this statement "examination of methods employed" require a department clerk to pass upon a judicial proceeding?

Mr. NORRIS. I think not.

Mr. MANN. The "method employed" of naturalization is intended to be a judicial proceeding, so that the examination of the method would be an examination of a judicial proceeding.

Mr. NORRIS. That might be.

Mr. MANN. Would not the whole purpose be reached if you were to strike out "methods employed," so as to make this read "examinations of naturalization proceedings?"

Mr. NORRIS. Well, that might be less harmful, but it would mean the same thing.

Mr. MANN. Whether it means the same thing or not does not make so much difference as whether you use language which in itself implies that the legislative body confers upon the executive body authority to examine into judicial proceedings.

Mr. NORRIS. It might be better language—I think it would perhaps be just as good—to a sensitive judge or a sensitive man who is afraid that the court might be criticised.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does not my friend, who, I believe, has been on the bench, believe that the authorization that is given to a bureau clerk here to criticise the act of the courts of his State, my State, and of the several States of the Union is going far beyond wise legislation?

Mr. NORRIS. I think the gentleman assumes something that the language is not intended to and does not convey.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is to make examination into the methods of procedure——

Mr. NORRIS. But the gentleman assumes that the examiner is going to criticise. It may be that he will praise. There is another reason why this language is not objectionable. What court is going to object to have somebody investigate his methods? Is there any honest judge who cares how many clerks look over his records or how many fellows investigate his methods?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the time for debate on the amendment has expired.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think gentlemen confound the judicial proceedings with naturalization proceedings. The fact is that the United States and Canada, so far as I know, are the only countries in the world that use the courts at all for the naturalization of aliens. It is really an executive and not a judicial proceeding In all other countries it is done through the department of state, and probably would have been in this country had it not been for the fact that our Department of State has no machinery scattered all over the country, and for the lack of machinery the original statute in regard to naturalization conferred this power upon the courts. It partakes somewhat of a judicial proceeding it is true, and the courts have held that a decree admitting an alien to naturalization has the force and effect of a judgment. But in its essence the proceeding is really not judicial; it is executive. With the words of this section stricken out that have been stricken out by the amendment, I think it would be a very sensitive court that could find any objection to the provisions of the section.

The gentleman has said that such a proceeding was never heard of. Why, I have called attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that in 1903, only three years ago, the Attorney-General through an assistant did examine the proceedings and the methods employed in the naturalization proceedings in the various courts throughout the United States, not only the Federal courts, but the State courts, with the result that some six hundred or a thousand, I have forgotten the exact number, of criminal proceedings were brought and the attention of the country was called to the fact that our naturalization laws did need revision.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That was the Attorney-General performing his duty——

Mr. BONYNGE. And the attention of the country was so far called to this fact that the President of the United States appointed a commission to revise the naturalization laws, and this bill is the result very largely of the work of that Commission. It has not been alone a Republican President who has recommended national supervision of naturalization. President Cleveland, in one of his messages to Congress, strongly urged upon Congress the necessity and the wisdom of providing for national supervision of naturalization, and we can not do that without this section, and I trust the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to strike out the section.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BONYNGE. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 59.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The count shows there is a quorum.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas and Mr. BONYNGE) reported that there were—ayes 59, noes 59.

The CHAIRMAN. Uuon this proposition the Chair will vote "aye;" and the ayes are 60 and the noes are 59. [Applause.]

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Colorado that the committee had better rise.

Mr. BONYNGE. I was about to make the motion, without the suggestion of the gentleman, that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15442—the naturalization bill—and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 395. An act concerning foreign-built dredges.

PERSONAL REQUESTS.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RIVES requests leave of absence for two weeks on account of important business.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania requests leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Elizabeth E. Schultz, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the requests be granted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

R. 14610 and 14419 be passed—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: Petition of Francis M. Buck, Thomas Simmons, and J. H. Baldreff, favoring the Dalzell bill (H. R. 9) relative to pensions for ex-Union prisoners of war at $2 per day for time of imprisonment—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 18, 1906.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. ULYSSES G. B. PIERCE, of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FREIGHT ON BULLION AND COIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Director of the Mint, recommending that the appropriation for freight on bullion and coin between mints and assay offices contained in the legislative, etc., appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, now pending, be increased from $40,000 to $65,000; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17576) providing for the entry of agricultural lands in forest reserves, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LACEY, Mr. SMITH of California, and Mr. BURNETT, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 6128) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pend d'Oreille River, in Stevens County, Wash., by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 13938. An act to extend the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, to the port of Oswego, N. Y.; and

H. R. 18750. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 395) concerning foreign-built dredges; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

ANDREW REEDER.

On motion of Mr. MCCUMBER, it was Ordered, That the bill S. 4852, Calendar No. 3368, granting an increase of pension to Andrew Reeder, be indefinitely postponed, the beneficiary having died.

ALLEN F. ROSE.

On motion of Mr. ALGER, it was Ordered, That the papers in connection with bill (S. 4923) to pension Allen F. Rose be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made on the measure.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On May 17:

S. 5537. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to allot homesteads to the natives of Alaska; and

S. 2292. An act for the relief of certain entrymen and settlers within the limits of the Northern Pacific Railway land grant.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is one offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], on page 19, lines 19 and 20, to strike out the words "in its judgment."

Mr. HALE. I think, Mr. President, that both the Senate and the country are very greatly wearied with this bill, and I must ask the President to-day to enforce the rule which has been, I am free to confess, pretty much of a failure.

Mr. TILLMAN. I can not hear what the Senator is saying.

Mr. HALE. I have said that the fifteen-minute rule that we adopted and under which we are proceeding has proved to be pretty much of a failure. Instead of its giving Senators interested in amendments who do not commonly occupy much of the time of the Senate a chance to make their fifteen-minute speeches, the time has been taken up almost entirely by half a dozen Senators, as the time for the long debate was taken up. I must ask to-day that the Chair enforce the rule with reference to yielding and dividing time.

What I hope, Mr. President, is that we may at an early hour to-day (and in this I think I express the feeling of Senators generally) reach the stage where amendments are not further in order; that is, where the bill will take its engrossment or third reading; and after that the bill undoubtedly, under the terms of the rule, will be open to general debate. I do not think it was considered when the rule was passed that such would be one of the results, but it is so framed that the fifteen-minute provision applies only to amendments. I do not see how the Chair could rule otherwise than that then general debate is in order.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator anticipate a long debate?

Mr. HALE. I have no right to give any admonition to other Senators, but I should hope when that stage is reached, which, as I have said, I trust will be at an early hour to-day, Senators taking part in the general debate will bear in mind that we have spent weary weeks on the bill, that many Senators have refrained from taking up time with the hope that we will have a speedy passage of the bill, and that we will be able with the rule enforced, even with the launching into general debate, after amendments are completed, to close this business up at an early hour to-day, and give us an opportunity for some rest over Saturday and Sunday. The bill has been most engrossing, and by reason of the early hours not only has it prevented all business at the Departments, but it has largely prevented the meeting of committees. We need the two days, Saturday for some other kind of business, and Sunday for some form of rest.

I have nothing further to say, only to appeal to the Chair to enforce the rule; and I hope Senators will bear in mind that we are getting very weary of this business.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, the question now before the Senate is, Shall the three words "in its judgment" be stricken from the bill? Those words apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and to the power given to it "to determine and prescribe" what, "in its judgment," will be "just and reasonable rate or rates, charge or charges, etc." In my opinion it makes not the slightest difference whether these words "in its judgment" are in the bill or out. If they are in the bill, they express what the Commission must necessarily do. If they are out of the bill, the Commission will go on and do it under the command of the bill to determine and to prescribe reasonable and just rates. It is immaterial whether the power be expressed or implied.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] yesterday said that this is a close question. Eighty years ago it might have been so considered. Originally and abstractly it may be regarded as a close question. It can not be regarded as a close question under the jurisprudence of the United States of eighty years' duration. Since the decision made by Chief Justice Marshall, uttering the opinion of the Supreme Court, in 1825, in the case of Wayman v. Southard (10 Wheaton, p. 42), eighty years ago, the principle which underlies the insertion of those words in this bill has been almost an axiomatic doctrine of American law. In that case he considered whether or not Congress could delegate its powers to the Supreme Court of the United States to make rules for inferior courts. It was no part of judicial power. There was no authority given to the Supreme Court in the Constitution to do any such thing. Their sole power to do it was the delegation of the powers of Congress to it to exercise the faculty of judgment and reason and constructive genius and devise rules to be applicable to inferior tribunals. The Supreme Court in that case took a distinction which, for the most part, has been overlooked in this debate. The court said:

> Congress may certainly delegate to others powers which the Legislature may rightly exercise itself.

I will not repeat further from the decision. It makes a distinction between those things which are strictly legislative and those which are in their nature administrative. Those that are strictly legislative and which the Legislature alone can attend to are the possession of the Legislature, or Congress, alone; but the administrative things that Congress can do it can delegate to others to do for it. While we have been discussing this measure we have passed a bill which recognizes the principle by authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to make rules for the government of Norfolk Harbor—a code of laws, or by-laws, if you please to call them. He must exercise judgment in fulfilling that authority.

It has been said time and again by the court in a multitude of cases, so numerous that it would cumber the RECORD to cite them, that Congress has the power to delegate all administrative duties to executive officers from the Secretary of State to bureau officers or commissions. Our Government is to-day run by and could not be either wisely, conveniently, or properly conducted without the constant recognition and exercise of these powers. They are necessary to good government.

If the Interstate Commerce Commission is not to be appointed to exercise its judgment, what are we creating it for? We are not creating a mere mechanical agency. Administration duties are not confined to mathematical or mechanical things. If the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Massachusetts were anxious to support the proposition of my colleague [Mr. MARTIN] to build up the Interstate Commerce Commission with men of great intellect, large experience, and large numbers, what are they doing it for? That they might not exercise their judgment? And if they are not to exercise their judgment, what are they to exercise? Are they to be mere lay figures? Far from it.

Mr. President, in the reciprocity feature of the tariff act drawn by so skillful a lawyer as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], the power to deem, to be satisfied with, to consider, to determine, to exercise large judgment and discretion in determining the nature of an act was reposed in the President of the United States, to act as such as the agent of Congress; and the court, which it is intimated here will set aside our power to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission authority to exercise its judgment, decreed that law constitutional and passed again for the dozenth time upon this well-known and universally recognized principle.

The Senator from Pennsylvania, like all able and experienced lawyers, always takes counsel from caution. I shall not advise his party not to heed his counsel. It is six one way and it is half a dozen the other, and they may take six or half a dozen, just as they please. It leaves the statute in full force and vigor either way you go.

An apprehension has been expressed here because Judge Harlan in one opinion did not pass upon a case that was not before him. Some men delight to catch at a straw. They are generally drowning men; and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], who caught at that straw, repeats every time this question comes up that Congress does not possess power to fix rates or to authorize anybody else to fix rates, and argues that there is no governmental power to fix rates, being a complete nullifier of all Congressional power as to that item, although similar powers being possessed by every government of the world, similar powers being exercised by all the States in this country, and similar powers having been recognized and repeated by the Supreme Court, as I am confident, by every judge who is now upon the Supreme bench. It was never questioned by any of their antecessors.

Intimation was given yesterday that Judge Brewer had given a hint in the recent case of Michigan Central Railroad Company v. Powers, auditor of Michigan, decided April 2, 1906, from which we should take warning. That was a case of which I have made a full statement, and I had rather insert the statement than occupy the attention of the Senate to hear it read in full.

The statement referred to is as follows:

> In this case the railroad company filed a bill in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Michigan to restrain the respondent, the auditor-general of the State, from enforcing against the appellant the provisions of act No. 173 of the Michigan laws of 1901, an act to provide for the assessment of the property of railroad and certain other companies, for the levying of taxes thereon by a State board of assessors, and for the collection of such taxes. The taxes involved in the suit are those for 1902, resulting from the first assessment under the statute.
> The new and peculiar feature of the statute lies in the application to corporate property of a special tax, known as the "average rate," which is derived by the following process: The total ad valorem taxes for all purposes, State, county, city, township, village, and school district, paid by property in Michigan which is taxed otherwise than under act 173, are divided by the total assessments of such property, whether made by one or another assessor, and the quotient resulting from this process of division is the rate of tax applied to corporate property under act 173.
> By section 16 the taxes collected from corporations under this act are to "be applied in paying the interest upon the primary school, university, and other educational funds, and the interest and principal of the State debt, in the order herein recited, until the extinguishment of the State debt other than the amounts due to educational funds, when such taxes shall be added to and constitute a part of the primary school interest fund."
> After a full hearing upon pleadings and proofs the circuit court entered a decree dismissing the bill (138 Fed. Rep., 223), whereupon the plaintiff appealed directly to the Supreme Court, under section 5 of the circuit court of appeals act.

The Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the decision dismissing the bill.

It will be seen from that decision that the case was one of mathematical computation, and that in that case Judge Brewer used words which his own sense of prudence or propriety afterwards led him to withdraw.

In the New York Independent of April 12, 1906, there is a note about this withdrawn observation of Judge Brewer. The Independent says:

> At the beginning of the week a decision of the Supreme Court, relating to the Michigan railroad taxes, was regarded as indicating, possibly, the court's attitude toward the question of the unconstitutionality of the pending bill, because of the following passage in the opinion, which was written by Justice Brewer.
> Hearing that this was interpreted as a warning or a hint, Justice Brewer, on the 4th, removed from the decision the entire passage.

So a passage which one judge of the Supreme Court would not permit to remain in his opinion is the sole juridical ground upon which the contention against these words is made. Now, what was the passage?

> In the nation no one of the three great departments can assume or be given the functions of another, for the Constitution distinctly grants to the President, Congress, and the judiciary separately the executive, legislative, and judicial powers of the nation. It may therefore be conceded—

Said the judge—> that an attempted delegation by Congress to the President or any ministerial officer or board of power to fix a rate of taxation—> or to exercise other legislative functions would be judged unconstitutional.

The judge evidently felt that without explanation those words ought not to remain a part of his opinion, and he eliminated them. If the mind that is fond of catching at small tokens like that will look at Judge Brewer's opinion in the Maximum Rate case (167 U. S.) it will be found that this action of Congress is being proceeded with exactly in accordance with a deliberate and clear-cut opinion which that distinguished jurist has himself expressed. It was done in defining what are the powers of Congress and in considering whether Congress had exercised them in the original interstate-commerce act. It has been referred to time and again, but I am unwilling in the closing hours of this debate to have our action obscured and doubts and difficulties suggested where there is no occasion therefor. The result of that would only be the obscuration of the public mind and the production of entangling and refined distinctions which do not exist and are not recognized in law.

In the Maximum Rate case (167 United States) Judge Brewer, this jurist whose withdrawn expression is made the basis of a great constitutional argument, said what I shall read. He was showing that Congress had not yet given power to the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix or to enforce reasonable rates, and he said as to this body:

> There were three obvious and dissimilar courses open for consideration. Congress might itself prescribe the rates, or it might submit to some subordinate tribunal this duty, or it might leave with the companies the right to fix rates, subject to regulations and restrictions, as well as to that rule which is as old as the existence of common carriers, to wit, that rates must be reasonable.

Note that, first, "Congress might itself prescribe the rates," and that, second, "Congress might submit to some subordinate tribunal this duty"—that is, "to prescribe the rates." This second power of Congress is exactly what it does in this bill—that is, submits to the subordinate tribunal, the Interstate Commerce Commission, "to determine and prescribe the rates which will be just and reasonable."

This is exactly in line with the decision of the Supreme Court that was given by Chief Justice Marshall in 1825, and which I have already cited.

Then he added these broad general historic expressions, which are fundamental to the enlightened and civilized law of the universe, to wit:

> Administrative control over railroads through boards or commissions was no new thing. It had been resorted to in England and in many of the States of the Union.

Referring us to these models and declaring that Congress has power to submit to some subordinate tribunal this duty to prescribe rates, that judge gives cold comfort to the suggestions which have been made in these closing hours upon this floor.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] yesterday intimated, he also taking counsel from caution, that it might be better to strike out the words. So it would be if this were an original question, and I was glad to see that the Senator from Texas was allowing his fine instinct as a lawyer to lead him to such cautious observation; and I beg leave to say to him that it was that very instinct which led me, in a question much disputed by learned and experienced lawyers, to advise that this body should not make the abrupt issue of its right to do away with an interlocutory injunction as to one class of cases, because I thought I clearly saw then, and I now perceive and almost know that I then saw, a method by which we could prevent delay and procure speedily a full trial. That method I described in the speech I made on May 1 and 2, and I will not repeat its provisions.

Quite a number of the provisions which I recommended have been embodied in the Allison amendment; and but for untoward events which have transpired my belief is that a more satisfactory solution of the controverted question would have been reached than now appears to be possible. That amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is far from what I would like to see it, and I apprehend the difficulty that might have been avoided remains. It was within our power to have gone around interlocutory injunction, after the fashion of a general who assaults in flank rather than by frontal attack, and the friends of the Allison amendment hope that this has been accomplished. While I greatly doubt that this is so, I shall vote for the bill as the best that this body could produce under the circumstances which environ it.

I regret also that the broad review by the courts, instead of the constitutional review only, has been adopted; but as I have given my reasons for this conclusion in full, I will not repeat them. I would never have assented to any ultimatum by any who were disposed to vote in favor of a strong and efficient rate bill which required their contention to abolish the interlocutory injunction; and any of the Democratic party who are of a different opinion spoke for themselves, and not for any known opinion of the party as here represented—certainly not for me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to take a few minutes of the time of the Senate to state my position on this question.

The words "in its judgment" were in the bill as it came from the House, and I am in favor of their retention. As the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] stated yesterday, they constitute one of the judicial-review amendments which he presented to the Senate. His amendments included six distinct propositions, five of them affirmative, one negative; that is, five of them contemplated additions or changes to the bill. The first was that the words "fairly remunerative" should be stricken from the bill.

Second, that the jurisdiction of the United States circuit courts to hear and determine the suits, the venue of which is defined in the House bill, should be made clear and definite.

Third, that at least five days' notice should be given of the hearing for a temporary injunction.

Fourth, that the expediting act should be made to apply to the hearing for a temporary injunction, thus requiring that the application for a temporary injunction should be heard by three circuit judges in circuits where there are three or more such judges, and in circuits where there are not three circuit judges, then by two circuit judges and a district judge, which they select.

Fifth, that an appeal should only lie from the order granting or continuing a temporary injunction direct to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The sixth was that these words "in its judgment," found in section 4 of the bill, should be retained.

I for one would not have consented to support what are known as the "Allison amendments" unless all of them were agreed to. It was my understanding that all these amendments should be incorporated in the bill; that the five affirmative propositions making changes in the bill, and the sixth, which contemplated no change, should be adopted.

I will not this morning discuss this question in detail, but having discussed it with members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, I desire to send to the Secretary's desk and have read a letter written to me, at my request, by Hon. C. A. Prouty, a member of that Commission, in which he states the views of the Commission on this important question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I desire to know what the paper is that is being read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a letter from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. TELLER. I wish, then, that the Secretary would begin to read it over again, so that the Senate may know what it is, for I do not believe half the Senate know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will begin the reading of the letter again.

Mr. LONG. I will state to the Senator from Colorado that it is being read as a part of my remarks. It was written to me at my request by Commissioner Prouty, of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. TELLER. Has the Senator finished his remarks?

Mr. LONG. I shall be through when the reading of the letter is completed.

Mr. TELLER. Then it will not interfere with the Senator if the letter is read from the beginning, so that we may all get an idea what it is.

Mr. LONG. Certainly not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will begin the reading of the letter again.

The Secretary read as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, May 17, 1906.

Hon. CHESTER I. LONG,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: You ask me over the 'phone what, in the opinion of the Commission, would be the effect of striking out the words "in its judgment," as they now occur in the fifteenth section. My associates are all absent in Philadelphia, but we have often discussed this matter, have very recently discussed it, and I am certain that we are entirely agreed in our opinion.

The vital thing is to confer upon the Commission the rate-making power with respect to the particular rate complained of and dealt with. If it clearly appears that the Commission has this power with respect to the rate upon which it passes, I have no apprehension whatever as to the amendment which has been adopted by the Senate for court review.

At the present time the Commission does not exercise this power, but simply determines as a question of fact whether the rate is unreasonable. In so doing, it discharges the functions of a court and jury, and its determination can be reviewed in the same way by the courts. If the present bill only confers this authority, even though the remedy to be applied is changed, the courts can still review the findings of the Commission, and would probably do so under the provision which the Senate has adopted.

For this reason it seems to me extremely important that there should be some language in the bill which clearly shows that the Commission in making the new rate is exercising its administrative judgment, and not merely deciding the question of fact as a judge or a jury. If the court-review amendment proposed by you had been adopted, all this would have been immaterial, for that of itself would have defined the jurisdiction of the courts; but in view of the amendment which has been adopted this becomes, to my mind, of paramount consequence. I do not mean, of course, that these particular words should be retained, but that some language should be used which clearly confers upon the Commission the power to make the rate.

We have often considered whether the use of these words could render the bill unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative authority, and are clearly of the opinion that this could not be so. They add nothing to the authority which every State commission which makes the rate in fact exercises, but they may be necessary to distinguish the thing which the Interstate Commerce Commission is to do in the future from the thing which it has done in the past.

Very truly, yours,

C. A. PROUTY, Commissioner.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] is correct in his assumption that any Senator here is fettered by some "understanding" in casting a free vote in accordance with his judgment upon this subject, I have not so understood it; but that suggestion of itself requires me to express my opinion on this amendment.

I have been as sincere a friend of this bill as any member of this body from the beginning. As to some questions affecting, in my opinion, its validity, I have followed my own judgment and have not been willing to be "herded" or led blindly by anyone. I act here under my oath, as every other Senator does under his. I discharge my duty under that oath as I understand, after as careful and laborious study as I can give to questions involved, that duty to be. I have thought, and have so stated in the Senate, that there are grave constitutional questions involved in this measure which can not be eliminated from it. It is idle for the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] or anyone else to insist that it is not an open question whether Congress possesses under the Constitution power to fix rates, although the Senator from Virginia quoted language from an opinion which clearly implies that that power exists. The Supreme Court in the Northern Securities case (193 U. S., 343) took occasion, however, expressly to say: "If Congress has the power to fix such rates—and upon that question we express no opinion—it does not choose to exercise its power in that way, or to that extent."

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will pardon me, we do not differ about that.

Mr. DANIEL. One judge used that language expressly and another one expressly——

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have said that I think the power will be sustained, and it is time the question is decided by the Supreme Court, and I shall vote for this bill, albeit having doubt about that question, because it never can be decided until a law is presented to the court which involves it. There are many lawyers here who doubt the constitutionality of the proposed delegation of power to the Commission. It is open to challenge and serious doubt, in my opinion; but, Mr. President, I shall vote for it, properly expressed, for the court of last resort should pass upon it as soon as possible, for the scope of Congressional power over this subject should be determined definitely. I should never wish Congress, if it possesses the power, to exercise it in fixing rates for 80,000,000 people, and I believe if it is done at all it must be done through the delegation of power to an administrative board.

I have not thought the bill, as it came to us from the House, constitutional, because of its failure to provide affirmatively for a judicial review of the order of the Commission fixing rates. I have so stated in debate hitherto. That objection has been eliminated, and the bill to-day is without danger of overthrow in the courts upon that ground.

I share the opinion expressed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], and many other lawyers on both sides of the Chamber, that if these words "in their judgment," which it is moved to strike out, mean anything they are dangerous words in the bill. The court, if it were necessary to save the constitutionality of the law, might possibly be able to give to these words a construction that would consist with the constitutionality of the act, for the courts resolve all doubts in favor of the constitutionality of an act of Congress when it can reasonably be done.

But, Mr. President, here we run against the well-settled principle of statutory construction, that it is presumed that every word and clause in a statute are intended by the legislative body to be given effect. The Supreme Court said, in Market Company v. Hoffman (101 U. S., 112–119):

> We are not at liberty to construe any statute so as to deny effect to any part of its language. It is a cardinal rule of statutory construction that significance and effect shall, if possible, be accorded to every word. As early as Bacon's Abridgement, section 2, it was said that "a statute ought, upon the whole, to be so construed that, if it can be prevented, no clause, sentence, or word shall be superfluous, void, or insignificant." This rule has been repeated innumerable times. Another rule equally recognized is that every part of a statute must be construed in connection with the whole, so as to make all the parts harmonious, if possible, and give meaning to each.

These words "in its judgment" are susceptible of but one construction. If they mean what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] stated yesterday he understands them to mean, I have no doubt whatever of their destructive effect. If they do not mean what he contends, they mean nothing. In either event they should go out.

Mr. President, this Commission, if these words were not in the bill, would be obliged to exercise their judgment. The words are not required to that end, for the Commission are given the power, and not only given the power, but the duty is imposed upon them, having condemned a rate fixed by a railway company, to substitute for it a just and reasonable rate. Of course, they must exercise the faculty of judgment upon the evidence before them in determining the justice and reasonableness of the rate which they substitute. This power inheres in the performance of the duty enjoined upon them. It is implied of necessity; but in the last analysis the question whether that rate is a just and reasonable rate or not is to be tested by the fact of justness and reasonableness, and not by the question whether or not the Commission exercised their judgment in fixing it. The exercise of judgment being implied necessarily without the words, to add them declares a purpose to confer a power in excess of that implied, and herein lies the danger of the words. They seem to delegate a discretion which belongs to Congress and which it can not delegate. Congress has declared the standard that all rates shall be "just and reasonable." It is the duty and within the power of this administrative board to administer this standard and keep, through the machinery provided, the carriers up to that standard.

The Supreme Court, in the Michigan Tax case (No. 397, October term, 1905), recently decided, uses, in its opinion, language very much accentuated by what was afterwards very properly under the circumstances eliminated from it, which abundantly shows the danger of leaving these words in this bill. The court concedes what was suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], in his speech on this bill some time since, that when the question of the delegation of legislative power arises under the constitution and legislation of a State it is a very different question from that arising under the Constitution of the United States. I will take but a moment with it. The court say:

> There might be a question whether, even if there were a clear delegation of legislative functions to other departments of the State government, it would be void under the Federal Constitution. Whatever, in view of the distinct grant in the Federal Constitution to the President, Congress, and the Judiciary of, separately, the executive, legislative, and judicial powers of the nation, may be the power of Congress in the delegation of legislative functions, a very different question is presented when the restrictions of the Federal Constitution are invoked to restrain like action in a State. Crimes against the nation must be prosecuted by indictment, yet a State may proceed by information. Suppose a State by its constitution grants legislative functions to the executive or to the judiciary, what provision of the Federal Constitution will nullify the action? Will the grant work an abandonment of a republican form of government or be a denial of due process or equal protection?

But it is unnecessary to enter into a discussion of this question, for in the case at bar there is no abandonment by the legislature of its functions in respect to taxation.

The statute prescribes as the rate of taxation upon railroad property the average rate of taxation on all other property subject to ad valorem taxes. It provides the most direct way for ascertaining such average rate, deducing it from a consideration of all the other rates. No authority—

Here they draw the line even under State legislation and State constitutions—

No authority is given to the local assessors to APPLY THEIR JUDGMENT to the question of the railroad rate. Their authority in respect to the matter of taxation is precisely the same as it was before and independently of this statute. Their duty is to act according to their judgments in respect to local taxes committed to their charge. When they have finished their action, taken, as it must be assumed to have been, in conscientious discharge of the duties assigned, from it by a simple mathematical calculation the average rate of taxation is determined.

And they go on to sustain that act, because what is left to the commission to do under the Michigan law is to work out a result by "a simple mathematical calculation."

If it were for me alone to say whether these words should remain in the bill or should go out of it, I would not dare, as a lawyer, to take the responsibility of leaving them in.

Mr. President, I will not take more time. I am anxious that the bill shall speedily pass. I am, as I have been from the beginning, more anxious that when it goes from our hands it shall go with efficient and well-drawn provisions and as free as possible from constitutional dangers. This has seemed to me to be the best and most loyal support which can be given to a measure.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that the present is the time to enter into a discussion as to whether Congress has the power to fix railroad rates. We have passed beyond that question and very distinctly have expressed an intention to commit to the Commission, in some form or other, the rate-making power. I shall not attempt to enter upon any discussion of the cases which, in my opinion, sustain the power of Congress to enact this character of legislation further than to say that I discover nothing in the expressions to which reference has been made to lead me to the belief that the Supreme Court of the United States has ever been disposed to question the power of Congress in that respect. The decision to which reference is frequently made, containing the expression of Mr. Justice Harlan in the Northern Securities case, does not legitimately or logically cast any shadow of doubt upon the power of Congress to regulate rates.

In the first place, it should be taken into consideration that Mr. Justice Harlan, who delivered the opinion of the majority in that case, had before expressed himself in a most emphatic manner in favor of the existence of this power in the case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Railway Company (167 U. S. Rep.). In the latter case the sole question was whether or not Congress had given to the Commission power to prescribe a particular rate. The opinion of the court was announced by Mr. Justice Brewer, who said in the course of his discussion that Congress had three obvious courses before it, either one of which it might have adopted. One of those was to fix the rate itself; another was to vest the power in a Commission or other subordinate body. Nor do I believe that that expression was entirely obiter dictum. I believe that question was properly before the court, because the issue was as to whether or not the power to prescribe rates had been given to the Commission, and if Congress had no authority to grant that power, manifestly it could not be vested in a commission; and had the court doubted the power of Congress to grant such authority it was a proper case in which to express that view. The only question in that case was whether or not Congress had committed such power to the Commission, and Mr. Justice Harlan, who announced the opinion in the Northern Securities case, dissented from the majority opinion, holding that no such power had been granted. The only ground upon which he could have dissented was that the power had been committed to the Commission by the law as it now stands, which would clearly indicate the authority of Congress so to do. Therefore I give no weight to the "intimation," so called, found in the Northern Securities decision, where Justice Harlan simply states that the court expresses no opinion touching the power of Congress to prescribe rates.

Mr. President, I do not pretend to say that I know the Supreme Court will sustain this character of legislation, but I unhesitatingly say that I have an abiding and perfect confidence that it will be sustained. I think every expression that may properly be considered an expression of the court throughout the whole judicial history of this subject indicates that such is the conviction of the court.

I will now briefly refer to those words which it is proposed to strike from this bill. I am frank to say, Mr. President, that before the amendments which have been already adopted had been agreed to there was a time when I doubted in my own mind the wisdom of retaining the words "in its judgment." It was because of the question as to whether or not, under the bill, there was jurisdiction in the court to inquire whether a constitutional right had been invaded or whether the authority of the Commission had been exceeded. That contention was made, and it was further contended that the bill as it stood would make the orders of the Commission absolutely conclusive and unreviewable for any purpose. We all conceded that if that was true the law would not stand the test of the Constitution, because Congress can not commit to a commission the power to make its findings conclusive. It can not deny to the courts the power or jurisdiction to inquire whether the constitutional rights of a party affected by an order of the Commission have been invaded.

But, Mr. President, the bill has been amended so that now there is no question but that the courts may exercise such jurisdiction. Jurisdiction is conferred on the courts to entertain suits, to hear and determine questions presented touching the validity of the orders of the Commission. That being so, how can it be argued or contended that these words "in its judgment" would preclude the court from inquiring into the constitutionality of the orders of the Commission? When the act itself says in plain, unequivocal terms that the court has jurisdiction to inquire into, to investigate, to hear and determine questions of that character, simply because the Commission is authorized to fix such rates as "in its judgment" are reasonable, can it be contended that such words preclude the court from inquiring into the validity, under the Constitution, of the rates fixed?

I do not believe that the retention of these words is of vital importance to this bill, but I believe that under the amendment that has been made, vesting jurisdiction in the courts, they are of importance, and they ought not to be stricken out, because I think they serve this purpose: They clearly manifest the intention of Congress to vest in the Commission the power and the discretion to fix and establish rates, subject to one thing only, and that is the power of the court to protect the rights of the parties under the Constitution and to restrain the acts of the Commission in violation of its authority.

These words serve to restrict the judicial inquiry to that single section, and if you strike them out, it is a serious question if you do not open up every order that is made by the Commission to a judicial review, not only on the ground of constitutionality or excess of authority, but upon the ground as to whether an order is reasonable in the judgment of the court as against the judgment of the Commission. Such, I believe, is not the purpose or the intent of the framers of this bill. Nor do I believe striking out these words will have that effect, but I would much prefer their retention.

Mr. President, no law was ever held unconstitutional because of one or two words. The question is ever, taking the law as a whole, as an entirety, What was the purpose and object of Congress in enacting it? It matters not that Congress has used the word "judgment" instead of "opinion," for example. It might just as well have been provided "if in its opinion it is a just and reasonable rate." The word "judgment" is used instead of "opinion," but that makes no difference. Do we not know that if we shall strike out those words, nevertheless the Commission is bound to and will use its judgment? We are committing these questions to its judgment. How will the Commission reach a conclusion that a given rate is reasonable or unreasonable except by the exercise of its judgment? If they are not to use judgment, why do you want men of great intellect, as some Senators have told us they want? Why do we want strong, powerful men if they are not to use their judgment? Why not appoint or employ so many automatons? Why not set up a nickle in the slot machine and drop your nickle in and get your result. No; we want able men on the Commission, because the abler the man the better his judgment and the more likely is he to reach a righteous and just conclusion. We know that they must exercise judgment. Strike out these words and they will exercise judgment just the same. Is not such a contention, Mr. President, a mere sticking in the bark instead of going to the heart of the proposition?

Then it is not that they must not use their judgment, but it is simply a question whether we will strike out these words and cast some doubt upon how far the court may go in a judicial investigation or whether we will leave these words in, thereby clearly showing it to be the intention of Congress that the discretion of the Commission is not to be reviewed beyond what may be necessary to determine the constitutionality of its orders or whether or not it has exceeded its authority.

I think it is quite important, Mr. President, that these words be retained in view of the amendment which has been adopted.

Mr. BACON. I have been of the opinion, Mr. President, from the beginning that these words "in its judgment" were improperly inserted in this bill, and that they would endanger the constitutionality of the bill, if it should be enacted into law with these words remaining. What has been so well said on this subject by learned Senators in the debate both on yesterday and to-day has confirmed me in this opinion.

If the Interstate Commerce Commission, or the member of it who wrote the letter which has been read to-day at the instance of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] were to be charged with the decision of this question, of course the very emphatic opinion expressed would remove all apprehension from our minds in this regard; but, unfortunately, this opinion in no manner relieves the doubt, because the Interstate Commerce Commission is not the body which will be called upon to decide whether or not these words render this bill unconstitutional. I am very frank to say, sir, that from the time I heard in the beginning of this debate the very able argument delivered by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], I have been impressed with the necessity of the greatest caution on our part in so framing this bill as to avoid constitutional objections.

I presume there will be no question in anyone's mind that there might be an attempted delegation of power by Congress to the Commission which would be unconstitutional. If we were to pass a bill in which we were to say in words that "all the legislative power of Congress in the fixing of railroad rates is hereby delegated to a commission," it would clearly be unconstitutional. There can be no doubt about that. On the other hand, if we were to pass a bill in which we should specifically fix rates in so many dollars and cents, and simply delegate to a commission the administration and enforcement of the law thus enacted, nobody would deny its constitutionality. That is equally free from doubt. These are the extremes. Between these two extremes lies the debatable ground. As we approach the one extreme the danger of unconstitutionality is greater, and as we approach the other extreme it is less. It is for us to endeavor to get upon the safe side, between these two extremes, and wherever there is a proposition involving doubt in this regard, unless it will emasculate the bill or seriously enfeeble it to reject it, we ought to have regard to that question of doubt and avoid the proposition and eliminate it from the bill if possible.

To my mind there is a very simple proposition which controls my conclusion in this matter. I may not be able to convey it to others with the clearness with which it presents itself to me. This bill proceeds on the theory, practically, that Congress is itself, by the proposed law, regulating the rates of the railroads. If the bill should be passed with only the words "just and reasonable" left in it, it would be the same as if Congress were to pass a law providing that the railroads should charge rates which were "just and reasonable," and should then delegate to the Commission the sole office of determining when they were "just and reasonable," and if not, then to itself determine and prescribe those "just and reasonable." This would be an administrative act on the part of the Commission, Congress having itself performed the legislative function of enacting that the rates shall be "just and reasonable." Congress in the performance of the legislative function will have determined and enacted the standard of regulation, and to the Commission will be delegated the power, in the administration of the law, to ascertain and declare what is a compliance with the standard thus fixed by Congress.

It is upon that basis that those of us who have confidence in the constitutionality of this proposed law rest our confidence; that is, that there is not in such a law with such provisions, both legislative and administrative, such a delegation of legislative power to the Commission as infringes upon the constitutional requirement that the departments shall be kept separate and that each department shall exercise its own powers.

But, Mr. President, suppose the present language in the bill remains, and instead of saying simply "just and reasonable rates" we use the words "in its judgment, be the just and reasonable rate or rates." Let us examine these words. If we paraphrase this paragraph, as I endeavored to paraphrase it with the other words, how will it read? It will read in this way: That Congress enacts that the railroads shall charge just and reasonable rates and then delegates to a commission, not the office of determining that which Congress says it shall be—to wit, "just and reasonable rates"—but the office of determining and prescribing what are, "in its judgment, just and reasonable rates." The two things, to my mind, are very distinct. In the one case there is a standard set by Congress. It enacts that there shall be just and reasonable rates, and sets "just and reasonable" as the standard to be complied with and to be ascertained by the Commission. With the words "in its judgment" remaining in, the standard is a different standard. It is a standard of what are, "in the judgment of the Commission," just and reasonable rates. It seems to me there can be—I will not say no doubt, because the fact that learned Senators and lawyers think otherwise would prevent me saying that—but, to my mind, while it may be a nice distinction, it is a very clear distinction. While we may have the power—and I think we do have the power—to delegate to a commission the office of ascertaining when the standard of "just and reasonable" which we require in this bill has been complied with, when that has been obtained I do not think we have the right to delegate to the Commission the right simply to say that, "in its judgment," it is so and so. It is a very different thing for a court to say, on the one hand, that the Commission has or has not exercised good judgment in determining whether a given rate is "just and reasonable" from, on the other hand, passing on the question whether the Commission has fixed a rate which, "in its judgment, is a just and reasonable rate."

Of course they must exercise their judgment. They must exercise their judgment to ascertain whether or not the rate is reasonable and just. They may be in error in the exercise of that judgment; and if so, it is for the courts to say. But it is not permissible that the court should be limited to saying whether the Commission had fixed a rate which "in its judgment was just and reasonable."

It might be held, if we leave the words as they are, that the delegation which we make to the Commission is not to use its judgment simply in the ascertainment of when just and reasonable rates have been determined and prescribed, but that we have gone farther and broadened the expression so that it is not simply what is "just and reasonable," but what "in its opinion may be just and reasonable." In other words, as suggested to me by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], the effect of it is to substitute its judgment in the place of the judgment and will of Congress, and, as suggested in the same breath by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], it really gives the right to the Commissioners to make a standard to be erected by themselves instead of being rigidly bound by the standard which Congress itself erects.

Mr. President, it seems to me with these words in, when it comes before the court, there must be one of two rulings by the court. Either the court would hold that the words were surplusage and pay no attention to them, or if they held that they were words not surplus in character and words inserted for a distinct purpose and intended to have a specific meaning, the court would undoubtedly then hold the provision to be unconstitutional; and this provision is so vital to the whole bill that if the provision should be held to be unconstitutional the whole act would fall with it. If the words are surplus, we should take them out. But if they are not surplus and are intended to have controlling effect and meaning, and if any such interpretation would endanger the bill, then we should take them out. For these reasons, in addition to others which have been forcibly presented by other Senators, which I will not repeat, I shall vote to strike out the words, and I deem it highly important that it should be done.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, very great men—philosophers, lawyers, judges, and divines—when they get into controversies about occult truth, seem addicted to overlooking very plain facts and familiar propositions that are called "common sense." They are mere commonplace, and therefore are not worthy of consideration in their judgment. This bill provides two things in the first section. One is that any rate that shall be prescribed upon transportation by the Commission shall be just and reasonable. The next is, taking the converse of the proposition, that no unjust or unreasonable rate shall be levied and such rates are unlawful, putting the proposition in both views. Therefore the whole emphasis of the bill in regard to rates rests upon the question of the reasonableness of the rates, for if they are unreasonable they are unlawful. I do not suppose this bill intends to confer upon the Commission the right to levy an unlawful rate, denounced in the bill as being unlawful because it is unreasonable.

But here are found words respecting the powers of the Commission that include the word "judgment," and that is seized upon as giving to the Commission the right to pronounce a final decree, a final judgment, a judgment that is in dignity, if not in all respects, the same as a final judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States; that is to say, when the Commission pass upon the rates which in their judgment are reasonable, that that shall be the end of the matter. There will be no further review by any court or any tribunal at all. A man or a corporation injured by it who says that the rate levied by the Commission is grossly unreasonable and unjust has his mouth shut. He has no right to get it in court and make any statement against it. It is a final and conclusive order by the Commission of the fact that the rate is reasonable and is not, therefore, appealable or reversible. Nothing can be said against it.

If the gentlemen who are friendly to this bill undertake to crowd it upon the country in that form, so as to cut off all complaints against unreasonable and unjust rates, they will do one of two things. They will either be considered by the court as having stultified themselves by having put in the declaration that the rate which is unreasonable is unlawful, or else as intending to carry their purpose in spite of all opposition of reason and sense and justice and propriety, to fix rates that are absolute and unquestionable.

Now, having declared in the first section of this bill that no unreasonable and unjust rate is lawful—that it is unlawful—and if the Commission following up the judgment of the distinguished Commissioner whose letter was read to-day conclude that they have a power to fix a rate that nobody can question, in a court or anywhere else, as to its reasonableness, and if we follow their lead or dictation, we will, after a while, get ourselves into a more than unpleasant predicament. We will have to take back some of our language in this bill, or say we did not mean anything at all when we said that the rate should be unlawful if it was unreasonble or unjust.

There is where we stand. If we give some attention to the real meaning of the bill, there is no difficulty in striking out of the bill anything that controverts this meaning. Therefore it ought to be stricken out, whether the controversy over the word "judgment" is or is not correct, in order to relieve the bill of such a question as that, a question that reaches down to the very jurisdiction of the courts and the constitutionality of the bill. That is all I want to say about it. I am trying to find some way in which I can justify myself in supporting this legislation, but with this, amongst the balance of the queer things that are in it and others the Senate has rejected, I despair of being able to cast a vote in favor of it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain with any attempted constitutional argument the Senate, which is thoroughly wearied of all these questions. But the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is so important that I desire, and I think it only justice to myself, to explain in two or three minutes the reason for the vote which I shall give.

While I was out of the Senate for a moment I believe something was said about an understanding. I am not aware of any understanding that binds me to vote to keep these words in the bill. In the original draft of the amendment which we have adopted there was nothing said, as I understood, about striking out the words "fairly remunerative," and I was not aware of anything relating to "in its judgment." But, Mr. President, nobody can bind me to give a vote which I believe would endanger this bill. These words lie at the very bottom of the whole structure of this bill. If the act of the Commission in fixing a maximum rate is held to be unconstitutional on account of the words "in its judgment," the whole fabric of the legislation falls. They are essential and vital words, if they have any meaning at all, and I have yet to hear from anybody any explanation or argument which shows that these words have, if retained, any beneficial effect. The utmost that I have heard in their behalf is that they will prove harmless. Many great lawyers consider that they endanger the legislation. If at the best they are harmless and at the worst they will cause the destruction of the bill, I certainly can not take the responsibility of voting for them.

I want this legislation to succeed. I want it to stand upon the statute books. If it goes to the courts and the courts hold that those words are unconstitutional, as they well may, and the whole legislation falls, the people of the country will believe that this law has been a fraud from the beginning to the end, and that all of us alike who have to put it through with these words in it—House and Senate—never meant it to succeed. If other Senators are ready to take such a responsibility for the sake of keeping in the bill words admittedly unimportant, I am not. I want an opportunity to relieve myself by my vote from the responsibility for those words. If Congress keeps them in and the legislation falls, I do not want to be held responsible. I have been utterly unable to find any reason for keeping them there.

I do not regard the opinion of the Interstate Commerce Commission as important. They desire power. They would like to take the powers of the legislature and of the courts alike. They would like to take all the power that is possible. I do not blame them for it. But those who must pass upon this question are not the Interstate Commerce Commission. They are the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States. In my humble opinion, these words endanger this entire bill, and I am not ready, for the sake of keeping in language which at best is worthless, to retain words which threaten to bring the entire fabric of this long-labored legislation into ruin the moment it goes before a court of the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me, before he takes his seat, for I can not speak except in his time, to make a remark? The Senator has referred to a statement made a moment ago about an agreement with respect to what should be incorporated in this bill. I understood the Senator to say he had not been informed of any such agreement. I want to know if the Senator can tell us who is a party to any such agreement?

Mr. LODGE. I know nothing about it.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to say the same thing.

Mr. LODGE. I was shown an amendment in various forms, which has been known as the "Allison amendment." I cordially said that I approved of it. At that time there was no proposition to strike out the words "fairly remunerative;" and what I was shown had nothing to do with striking out "fairly remunerative." I gave no approbation to keeping in one set of words and striking out the other.

Mr. FORAKER. We have all agreed to the Allison amendment—all of us who voted for it. I agree to that.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Whether anybody agreed to anything remaining in this bill or going out of this bill on account of that, I did not. I never heard such a suggestion.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator from Massachusetts pardon me for a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. I referred to the statement of the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] yesterday, in which he said that the retention of the words "in its judgment" was a part of his series of amendments for judicial review.

Mr. LODGE. It may have been. It was not on anything that was shown to me.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, if it is hoped that we are about to take what will be the final vote on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], I should feel very sorely perplexed as to the proper course to pursue. In the parliamentary situation existing, however, the course of duty seems quite plain to me. I would prefer the retention of the words proposed to be stricken out. I would not have them retained if, as suggested, they would prove fatal to the bill on which we have labored so long and so earnestly. It must be admitted that we are now dealing with an amendment which touches close to the very vitals of this proposed act. That a mistake in the retention of these words will render the bill of questionable constitutionality is the opinion seriously and deliberately expressed by lawyers of great ability and just renown in this Chamber. Others of equal ability and high reputation in the Senate and throughout the country unequivocably announce the opinion that the retention of these words will prove fatal to the bill itself. Others, desirous of retaining the words, say they can not agree with the opinions thus expressed. They do not indulge doubts. Believing that the retention of the words will prove beneficial and not destructive, they would have the motion voted down.

Mr. President, the mere existence of the question, supported on respective sides by gentlemen of such eminent and unquestionable sincerity and ability, indicates that we should exhaust the parliamentary privileges at our disposal in endeavoring to be right before we finally act. This bill will pass into conference. While I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, I shall do so through an abundance of caution, reserving unto myself, as every Senator without reservation will have, the right to recede from the Senate amendment providing the conclusion is ultimately reached, after the most painstaking and careful investigation, that the Senate may thus recede without injuring the measure itself. I believe that prudence and a fair regard for the legislation with which we are dealing require that this course be pursued, and I shall vote accordingly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I recognize the anxiety of the Senate to come to a vote upon this amendment, but I regard it as the most important upon which the Senate up to this time has been called to vote, and I believe that the vote which we will cast upon it will be the most important vote which has been taken up to this time in connection with this measure.

I can not believe that these three words are necessary to this legislation. I am utterly unable to see wherein they add to the powers of the Commission or in any way enlarge those powers. From the very first time that I read this bill I have regarded—and I have never changed my opinion in that respect—these words as dangerous to the constitutionality of the bill. If they add anything at all to the powers of the Commission, they add powers or functions which we have not, I fear, the power to confer upon them.

Mr. President, I am going to detain the Senate only a few moments. It is well understood in connection with this legislation—it has been repeated here many times during the course of this debate—that the Constitution devolves the whole judicial power upon the courts, either those created by the Constitution or those created by Congress in pursuance of the Constitution. Congress can not confer judicial powers upon an administrative body, and nobody has contended that the Commission is anything but an administrative body. This language, in my judgment, if it does not invest the Commission with judicial powers comes dangerously nigh doing it, and if it does, of course everybody admits that it would destroy the constitutionality of the act.

On the other hand, the whole legislative power of the Government rests in Congress. Congress has no power to delegate that power either to the Commission or to any other tribunal whatever. I do not say that by the use of these words Congress will delegate its legislative power over this subject to the Commission, but I do say that I fear that these words will give the Commission in the matter of the rate-making standard such a discretion as will make that standard a flexible standard, an adjustable standard, and if it shall be made flexible and adjustable, by virtue of these words, then it will not be the application of an absolute standard such as we have a right to prescribe and call upon the Commission to enforce, but it will be the application of a standard adjusted to the will and the judgment and the discretion of the Commission and it might invest the Commission with a degree of legislative power with which we have not the right to invest them.

I have not been disturbed by the suggestion that the standard which we have adopted is already a rule of the common law. The standard we have prescribed is indeed a time-honored rule of the common law, and that fact does not at all militate against it as a proper standard, but merely shows the fact that the standard which we have adopted is a just and wise standard and one which has stood the test of the ages. Congress has the right to repeal every rule of the common law, and when we do not repeal it, but prescribe it as a rule of action in fixing rates of transportation, we merely affirm it as a just and reasonable standard and rule. The trouble, in my judgment, is, if these words remain in the bill, Congress may give the Commission a discretion with reference to the standard such as the courts may hold will destroy the standard as an absolute standard, a fixed rule, and that we may inject an element of judgment and discretion on the part of the Commission to an extent that will cause the courts to hold it to be a delegation of legislative power.

Mr. President, these are not the only words used in the bill in this connection that, in my judgment, as a matter of wise precaution, ought to be stricken out. We ought so to frame this provision in the bill—and it is a vital provision—that there can be no sort of question, when the matter comes before the court for final adjudication, that the Congress intended and did, as a matter of fact, only lay down an absolute standard, and required the Commission to apply that standard to the facts in the particular case before it for decision. The words I refer to are those immediately before the language we are now discussing. They are the words "to determine and prescribe."

These words are nearly as objectionable and dangerous to the constitutionality of this measure, to my mind, as the words "in its judgment."

"Prescribe" is a legislative term. It refers to a rule of action, and every law is a rule of action. "Determine" is a judicial term. It refers to the investigation by a court and its declaration of a judgment upon the facts and law. Putting those two words together, we have words which prescribe or which are pertinent in connection with prescribing both legislative and judicial functions, and we are treading upon dangerous ground when we use words that are descriptive of powers which we have not the power to give to the Commission.

Mr. President, I am advised that the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] will introduce an amendment eliminating these two words and substituting for them the words "to ascertain and declare." "Ascertain" is an administrative term. "Declare" is an administrative term. In my judgment, if we shall strike out these two words, in addition to the three words which are now under consideration, and insert the words which I understand will be proposed in an amendment to be presented by the Senator from Florida, "ascertain and declare," the act will be reasonably safe from constitutional objection. I do not mean to say by any means that if all of these words shall remain in the bill it will not be constitutional, but I merely suggest fears that we may endanger its constitutionality by the use of words not at all necessary to confer on the Commission all the powers we can give it over this subject. Are the opinions of the greatest constitutional lawyers in this body, to the effect that this language jeopardizes the constitutionality of the measure, to weigh for nothing? Are we willing to ignore them and include words that no one on either side of the Chamber has been able to show in any way add to the powers of the Commission or increase the effectiveness of this legislation and which Senators not friendly to the legislation wish retained?

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] yesterday said, if these words were kept in the bill, the bill would be clearly unconstitutional. He said it would be equal to writing on the face of the bill "this bill is unconstitutional." He said that without this language this bill would, in his opinion, still be unconstitutional, because, as I understood the Senator, he claimed that Congress, in prescribing a rate, is confined to a rate which is reasonable and just, and that this measure invested the Commission with the power to fix a reasonable and just rate. Therefore that Senator concluded that Congress had delegated to the Commission its legislative powers over this subject in all their completeness. His argument was, in short, that Congress had conferred on the Commission its full power over transportation rates, and that that was necessarily a delegation of legislative power which it had no constitutional right to do.

The conclusion of the Senator from Ohio would probably be sound if his premises were sound, but to my mind his premise is not only unsound, but that unsoundness can be easily demonstrated.

Mr. President, I deny that Congress is confined in fixing a rate to fixing a rate that is just and reasonable. Congress may fix a rate based upon any policy which it may in its judgment adopt, whether it be wise or unwise. Congress may fix a rate that is not reasonable and is not just, if it shall be so minded. The only limitation upon the power of Congress in this regard is that it shall not fix a rate which will deprive the carrier of his property without just compensation.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall barely have time to finish, and the Senator will have time after I get through.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well.

Mr. SIMMONS. Congress is limited in its power over rates only by the fifth amendment to the Constitution. This is not true with respect to the Commission acting as the agent of Congress in this matter. The Commission is limited by that provision and by the additional requirement that it shall not fix a rate which is not just and reasonable, a limitation upon its powers prescribed in the interstate-commerce act and this bill, which is the law of its existence. That is the difference in the powers of the Congress and the Commission over this subject. Congress can prescribe a mileage rate and require every common carrier engaged in interstate commerce in the United States to conform itself in fixing its rates and its charges to this mileage basis. Such rate basis might work no harm to many carriers; to others it might be a very unjust and a very unreasonable basis of rate; while to others a level rate on this basis might work confiscation. With reference to that part of these carriers to whom such a thing would work no hardship and injustice the rate would be a constitutional and lawful rate; likewise to those whom it merely worked an injustice by reducing their profits to a low level; but with reference to that number of these carriers who by reason of the smallness of the volume of traffic and travel over their lines could not realize a return which would afford just compensation within the constitutional meaning of these words, it would be an unconstitutional and unlawful rate. The rule thus established by Congress might, it will be seen, in some cases be unreasonable and unjust, yet not unconstitutional or illegal, and that it would be unconstitutional only in the cases where it would work practical confiscation of the carrier's property. That the rate prescribed by Congress shall not be confiscatory in its effect is the only limitation of the power of Congress over rates, and it would be the only one on the Commission in fixing the rule, had not Congress decreed otherwise in prescribing a just and reasonable rate as the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from North Carolina has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] on page 19, lines 19 and 20, to strike out the words "in its judgment."

Mr. HALE. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary called the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. WARREN] and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY].

Mr. NELSON. On behalf of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE], I wish to state that he has a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], and he desired to have me state that he would vote on these questions as I vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. PROCTOR], but he informed me before leaving that he would vote in favor of this amendment if present.

Mr. McLAURIN. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. MONEY] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I make the announcement for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—50.

Alger	Clark, Wyo.	Kean	Pettus
Allee	Clay	Knox	Platt
Ankeny	Culberson	Lodge	Rayner
Bacon	Dick	McCreary	Scott
Bailey	Dillingham	McCumber	Simmons

Burkett	Dolliver	Hopkins	Newlands
Clapp	Elkins	La Follette	Perkins
Clarke, Ark.	Frye	Latimer	Piles
Crane	Fulton	Long	Warner

NOT VOTING—15.

Aldrich	Dubois	Kittredge	Smoot
Burrows	Gamble	Money	Sutherland
Burton	Gorman	Patterson	Warren
Depew	Heyburn	Proctor

So Mr. TELLER's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I send to the desk an amendment, and I ask to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 12, on page 20 of the last print of the bill, strike out the words "determine and prescribe" an insert in lieu thereof "ascertain and declare."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. [Putting the question.] The noes have it.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is rejected.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask for a division on the demand for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again put the question if the Senator desires.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The SECRETARY. In line 12, page 20, of the last print strike out the words "determine and prescribe" and insert in lieu thereof the words "ascertain and declare."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The question having been taken by yeas and nays, the result was announced—yeas 21, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Bacon	Clay	McLaurin	Taliaferro
Bailey	Foster	Mallory	Teller
Blackburn	Frazier	Martin	Tillman
Brandegee	Hansbrough	Morgan

NOT VOTING—21.

Aldrich	Depew	Latimer	Stone
Alger	Dubois	Money	Sutherland
Burrows	Gamble	Overman	Warren
Burton	Gorman,	Patterson
Clarke, Ark.	Heyburn	Proctor
Culberson	Kittredge	Smoot

So Mr. MALLORY's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 20, line 23, after the word "prescribed," to strike out "such order shall go into effect thirty days after notice to the carrier and shall remain in force and be observed by the carrier" and insert:

All orders of the Commission, except orders for the payment of money, shall take effect within such reasonable time, not less than thirty days, and shall continue in force for such period of time, not exceeding two years, as shall be prescribed in the order of the Commission.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 21, line 9, after the word "otherwise," to strike out "shall publish and file" and insert "in respect to."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 21, line 10, before the word "fail," to strike out "and" and insert "shall."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 21, line 12, after the word "the," to strike out "portion" and insert "just and reasonable proportion."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 21, line 24, after the word "exists," to insert "and this provision shall apply when one of the connecting carriers is a water line."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 5, on page 23, line 22, after the word "after," to insert:

Provided, That accrued claims may be presented within one year.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 24, line 21, after the word "proper," to strike out—

And the orders of the Commission shall take effect at the end of thirty days after notice thereof to the carriers directed to obey the same, unless such orders shall have been suspended or modified by the Commission or suspended or set aside by the order or decree of a court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, however, That the Commission, for good cause shown, may extend the time in which such order shall take effect.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 26, line 21, after the word "was," to strike out "regularly" and insert "lawfully."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 27, line 13, after the words "United States," to insert "against the Commission."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 27, line 17, after the word "office," to insert the following:

And may be brought at any time after such order is promulgated. And if the order or requirement has been made against two or more carriers then in the district where any one of said carriers has its principal operating office; and if the carrier has its principal operating office in the District of Columbia, then the venue shall be in the district where said carrier has its principal office, and jurisdiction to hear and determine such suits is hereby vested in such courts.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 28, line 4, after the word "suits," to insert "including the hearing on an application for a preliminary injunction."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 28, line 17, after the word "causes," to insert:

Provided, That no injunction, interlocutory order, or decree suspending or restraining the enforcement of an order of the Commission shall be granted except on hearing after not less than five days' notice to the Commission. An appeal may be taken from any interlocutory order or decree granting or continuing an injunction in any suit, but shall lie only to the Supreme Court of the United States: Provided further, That the appeal must be taken within thirty days from the entry of such order or decree and it shall take precedence in the appellate court over all other causes, except causes of like character and criminal causes.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was in section 6, page 30, line 19, after the word "order," to strike out the following:

Whenever an order of the Commission made in pursuance of section 15 as amended, other than an order for the payment of money, shall have been complied with for the period of three years, such order shall not thereafter be in force as against the carrier so complying therewith.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Wisconsin will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, after line 23, insert:

SEC. 16b. Nothing in this act shall prevent any common carrier subject to its provisions from giving free transportation or reduced rates to the officers of the organizations of such employees for the purpose of transacting the business of such organizations with such railroads: Provided, That such reduced rates or free transportation are not issued with the view of discriminating in favor of or against any particular class of employees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PETTUS. This amendment proposes to change what has been adopted in the Senate, and I wish to suggest to the Chair whether the amendment is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not of the opinion that an amendment exactly like the one now offered has been adopted by the Senate. There is a general provision, but it does not include, the Chair thinks, the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As there seems——

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment may be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment, as follows:

On page 30, after line 23, insert:

SEC. 16b. Nothing in this act shall prevent any common carrier subject to its provisions from giving free transportation or reduced rates to the officers of the organizations of such employees for the purpose of transacting the business of such organizations with such railroads: Provided, That such reduced rates or free transportation are not issued with the view of discriminating in favor of or against any particular class of employees.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I should like to say a word with reference to this proposed amendment.

It is well known that the locomotive engineers, railway conductors, firemen, brakeman, and other operatives have regularly constituted organizations. Those organizations very largely deal with the railroad management concerning the relations of the management to the employees. They are represented by officers who are frequently not employees of the railway being dealt with. It does seem, inasmuch as the business of the organization relates to the business of the employees and the railway management, it is but just and proper that these officers, properly qualified and commissioned to act, should be permitted to pass over the railroads under such conditions as the management might think proper to impose without any restraint as to transportation.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, just a word. I am entirely in favor of the proposition. I should like to ask my colleague what he intends to reach by the proviso?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the Secretary read it again.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That such reduced rates or free transportation are not issued with the view of discriminating in favor of or against any particular class of employees.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That was added simply to cover any possible discrimination, so that the representatives of all organizations should be treated alike with respect to free transportation issued by the railroad company.

Mr. SPOONER. Representatives of all the railway organizations?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The representatives of the different organizations, that there should be no discrimination between them.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not know but it might be construed by some railway companies as limiting the context. Of course it would be given to all officers of the railway organizations, as I think it ought, but I do not quite see what office the proviso will perform except as a restriction. It might be construed, if the railway company saw fit to do it, into a prohibition.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It occurs to me, since the provision is only permissive and can only be permissive, that the railway companies might favor some officers of certain organizations. The proviso simply makes it impossible that any such discrimination shall be shown and that all officers of the different railway organizations shall be treated alike; that if free transportation shall be furnished to the officers of any one organization, like favors shall be shown to officers of other organizations. That is the only purpose of the proviso.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer an amendment to appear on page 34.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out from and including the word "shall," in line 19, page 34, to and including the word "Commission," in line 21, same page, and in lieu thereof insert:

Or refuse to submit such records and memoranda as are kept to the inspection of the Commission or any of its authorized agents or examiners such carrier.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, one word in reference to this proposed amendment. It will be observed, by reference to the text of the bill, that there is an absolute prohibition upon the keeping of any record by a company or any of its employees, save and except such record as shall be prescribed or approved by the Commission. In so far as that relates to the books of account to be uniform throughout the country, it seems reasonable and just; but I desire to suggest an illustration of the hardship which would result if this absolute prohibition should exist with reference to memoranda made under the varying conditions of railway management. For instance, a small road to which I referred the other day, extending from the mines at Butte to the mines at Anaconda, will be engaged in interstate commerce, because merchandise shipped in from the East to the merchants along the road and the copper products of the smelter are shipped to the Atlantic seacoast. Therefore this small road will necessarily be engaged in interstate commerce. At the same time the ore trains loaded at different points constitute the chief traffic of the railroad. In some instances cars are loaded at mines under lease, in other instances at mines owned by the individuals working them, but not belonging to the road or the smelting company; in other instances the ore belonging to the company which is the chief owner of the road fills the cars in the train. All the varying conditions constantly changing render it quite impossible that books could long in advance be prescribed in the nature of memoranda—books which could meet these various conditions.

My amendment proposes to affix a penalty, not in the way of an absolute prohibition upon the making of memoranda at all not prescribed by the Commission or approved by the Commission, but making the penalty attach to the carrier refusing to exhibit to the Interstate Commerce Commission, or any of its agents or examiners, whatsoever memorandum is kept.

Mr. HOPKINS. I suggest to the Senator from Montana that I think there will be no difficulty under the provision of the bill as it now stands, if I may call his attention to it——

Mr. CARTER. But this difficulty would arise: The company, its agents, and trainmen would be imperiled, in so far as the penalty would be concerned, if they used any kind of a memorandum prior to approval. A company doing business 3,000 miles from the Commission would be in a hopeless and helpless condition if its officers and agents could not, without danger of fine or penalty, make memorandum to meet the approval of the Commission.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to say to the Senator from Montana——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is impossible to hear the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. If it fails to prescribe the books——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, the colloquy going on between the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] is not heard by anybody on this side of the aisle.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has just so stated.

Mr. HOPKINS. If we could have a little better order in the Senate, Mr. President, it would be quite as agreeable to the Senators who are attempting to understand each other upon this proposition as it would be to Senators on the other side.

The suggestion I was making to the Senator from Montana was that the language now in the bill is of such a character that, until the Interstate Commerce Commission approves of the set of books which is prepared by the company, no prosecution or penalty would be inflicted.

Mr. CARTER. For instance, a book is used prior to its approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It will be readily conceded that the person using such book is made subject to the penalty prescribed in the statute if the book is not subsequently approved. This does not relate to the regular books of account, but to memorandum kept by people who are engaged in the constantly varying relations of traffic and trade, and I think such books are properly made subject to the inspection of the Commission or any of its examiners for a very good purpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Montana allow the amendment which he proposes to be again read? There was so much confusion in the Chamber we did not hear it when first read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, line 19, after the word "business," it is proposed to strike out "or shall keep any other accounts, records, or memoranda than those prescribed or approved by the Commission," and to insert "or refuse to submit such records and memoranda as are kept to the inspection of the Commission or any of its authorized agents or examiners, such carrier."

Mr. CARTER. In my opinion the amendment I have proposed relieves the companies, their agents, and employees from the prosecution and the penalties provided by the bill for the mere act of keeping desultory memoranda, which have nothing directly to do with the accounts kept on the regular books of the company.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I think it would be a fatal mistake to take the words proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] out of the bill, if it is the purpose of the Senate to try to stop rebates. I call attention to something in the Philadelphia Inquirer of to-day, of an occurrence yesterday, showing that before the Interstate Commerce Commission at Philadelphia some very interesting facts were brought out, and I ask the Secretary to read what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer of Friday, May 18, 1906.]

GRAFTING, INCIDENT OF PENNSY'S BUSINESS, COMMISSION HEARS—REFUTING THAYER, OPERATOR TELLS OF REBATES IN 1903—EVIDENCE SHOWS THAT SCRAMBLE ON PART OF HIGH OFFICIALS SEEMS TO HAVE BEEN ENCOURAGED—CARS IN RETURN FOR FUEL COAL.

Grafting of a kind which, had it existed elsewhere, would have caused constant upheavals and scandals flourished for years in the Pennsylvania Railroad, according to evidence adduced before the Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday.

Instead of having been frowned upon, the scramble for graft on the part of high officials seems to have been encouraged and accepted by the management of the road as one of the incidents of the railroad business.

Every time Lawyer Glasgow, who is conducting the case for the Government, stuck the probe into the affairs of the railroad yesterday he brought forth more details concerning the gift of valuable dividend-paying mining stocks to Pennsylvania Railroad officials and he remarked it was more than a coincidence that these gifts went to men placed in a position to be of direct value to mine owners desiring an unfair advantage over their neighbors.

Equally startling was the statement made under oath by Frank H. Wigton, of this city, manager of the Morrisdale Coal Company and a large operator in the bituminous fields, that as late as 1902 or 1903 he had received thousands of dollars in rebates from the Pennsylvania Railroad. He named W. H. Joyce, former superintendent of transportation of the Pennsylvania Railroad, as the man who had handed him over the check for these sums.

REFUTES THAYER'S STATEMENT.

Inasmuch as Fourth Vice-President Thayer made the statement during the present investigation that the Pennsylvania Railroad had not given any rebates since 1899, this charge by Mr. Wigton is most significant.

From this same witness was also brought out the fact that at the present time the Pennsylvania Railroad, by its manner of distributing orders and cars for fuel coal, directly discriminates against certain mines. By giving fuel coal to the railroad at a low price certain mines secure in many cases ten times the number of cars they would be entitled to upon any equitable distribution. In other words, they pay the railroads in order to secure a sufficient quantity of cars.

That the Morrisdale Coal Company was forced to lose more than $40,000 because of the refusal of the Pennsylvania Railroad to supply them with cars, even as many as ten or twenty a day, at the same time the Berwind White Company, one of the pets of the Pennsy, was getting a special order of 500 cars a day, was another point made by Mr. Wigton.

In fact, by a clear, logical, and apparently irrefutable series of statements, this witness showed that not only was the car distribution system prevailing in the four years prior to January 1 of this year a most unsatisfactory one, and one that tended to give favored companies a monopoly of the coal business, but that the present much-vaunted system in practice is nearly as bad.

LEARNED MUCH FROM PUGH.

Charles E. Pugh, second vice-president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, was a witness from whom much was learned concerning the manner in which the management of the road crushed the little fellows, while mining companies in which railroad men were interested were allowed to extend their field of operations.

Superintendent of Transportation Michael Trump, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, was less fortunate, and admitted having stock in coal companies which had either been given to him or which he bought at a figure very low, considering the large dividends the stock is now paying.

R. L. O'Donnell, general superintendent of the Buffalo and Allegheny Valley Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, was the man whose popularity with mine owners seemed to have been productive of constant gifts of valuable stocks, however. Hundreds of shares were given to Mr. O'Donnell while he was located at Pittsburg and in a position to give necessary cars to operators. These stocks in most instances cost him nothing, and in one case his block of holdings in a mine now brings him an income of $1,200 a year. As in the case of other officials, these stocks were given to him for no particular reason.

Mr. O'Donnell did furnish one clew in that they had been given to him because he had been in the Pittsburg district for some time, and mine owners wanted to see him get along.

Accustomed as they were to hearing of no cost being attached to this stock, the Commission really sympathized with this witness when he testified that he had been compelled to pay $20 a share for stock whose par was $50. They felt relieved, however, when further questioning brought out the fact that this money had come back in dividends.

Besides some thousand or more shares of stock acquired from philanthropic mine owners, Mr. O'Donnell possesses some other stocks which he paid full value for. These, it appeared, were purchased since his removal from the Pittsburg division.

So great an evil has the private car become in the coal fields, as a means of creating the same kind of monopoly that private cars have built up for the beef trust and various western fruit companies, that Commissioner Cockrell, the ex-Senator from Missouri, was yesterday moved to make some comments that tend to prophesy that one of the outcomes of the present investigation will be the abolishing of private cars. He also mentioned that more publicity should be thrown upon the railroad business.

"Railroads," said this Commissioner, "are public-service roads, and the public have a right to know what they are doing and whether all patrons are being treated alike. Just as long as the curtain of secrecy is kept down, so long will the public—and rightly, too—suspect that all is not what it should be in the management of the railroads.

"Then, again, the railroads should stick to their business as carriers. The railroad should take coal or any other commodity at the point of production and be the sole one to care for it until it is delivered at its destination. It should provide the cars, motive power, icing, or anything else, and make proper and reasonable charges for this service.

"It should not, however, permit certain companies, who, by reason of their wealth, can afford to buy private cars, to do so and thus engage in the railroad business to the detriment of less fortunate and smaller competitors. Full publicity should be given to all the sheets showing the car distribution of the railroads.

"The private car seems to be the main evil in the way of the fair treatment of all patrons of the road."

RUMOR OF CASSATT'S RESIGNATION.

The laying bare of their system of corruption, the showing up of the many forms of discrimination, and how Pennsylvania Railroad officials, by practices bordering on, if not overstepping, the limits of legality, fostered among mining companies in which they owned stock acquired by gift or purchase, has created consternation at Broad Street Station. Denials are getting fainter and fainter, as it is seen that Lawyer Glasgow and his assistant know the facts.

A rumor that President Cassatt believes it is time to resign, in order to escape being put on the gridiron, was persistent on the street yesterday, and after each denial broke out afresh.

R. L. O'Donnell, whose air of prosperity when he reached the witness stand was fully backed up when he told of his many holdings in coal mines, proved a very interesting witness. First he was questioned as to where he is located at present, and said that his headquarters are now in Buffalo, but that he formerly was at Pittsburg.

Here are some of his holdings: Three hundred shares of Keystone Coal and Coke Company, 400 shares of Latrobe and Connellsville Coal Company, 120 shares of Lusisco Company, 200 shares of Jamison Coal Company, 25 shares of Preston Coal Company, 12 shares of Johnstown Coal Company, 100 shares of Salisbury Coal Company, 40 shares of Bowman Coal Company, 30 shares of Bagdad Coal Company, 20 shares of Gilpin Company, 30 shares of Avonah Company, and 100 shares of Central Coal and Coke Company, the latter being a stock which he bought at above par.

EXPLAINED OWNING STOCK.

Some of his explanations concerning the possession of this stock follow:

"How many shares of Keystone Coal and Coke Company do you own?" "Three hundred."

"Where did you get it?" "Through having held stock of the Madison Coal Company, which it absorbed."

"Where did you get the Madison stock?" "I participated in its organization."

"Did you pay for it?" "No."

"How many shares of Madison had you?" "One hundred."

"Who issued it?" "Col. George F. Huff, Mr. Gross, and probably Lloyd Huff."

"Who gave the stock to you?" "Mr. Gross, I think."

"How was that?" "They were forming the company and gave me the stock."

"What position did you hold then?" "I was assistant superintendent of the Pittsburg division."

"And you got 300 Keystone for your 100 Madison?" "Yes."

"Does it pay dividends?" "The Keystone does; the Madison did not."

"How much does the Keystone pay?" "Eight per cent."

"That gives you $1,200 a year?" "Yes."

"How much stock of the Latrobe and Connellsville Coal Company do you own?" "Four hundred shares."

"Where did you get it?" "That was formed from the Saxton and Superior companies. I got the stock in the same way. I had 100 Saxton and 100 Superior."

"Who gave you that?" "Mr. Saxton, I think."
"Has the Latrobe paid any dividends?" "Yes."
"How much?" "I think 6 per cent."
"Who gave the Nucisco stock to you?" "J. Howard Patton."
"Does that pay a dividend?" "No."
"How about the Jamison Company?" asked Mr. Glasgow. "I have 200 shares, par value $50."
"How did you get that?" "It was given to me shortly after the company was running."
"Who gave it to you?" "Edward Pitcairn, freight trainmaster of the Pittsburg division."
"Did it pay dividends; and if so, how much?" "It did. Four per cent."
"What was your position then?" "Assistant superintendent of the Pittsburg division."
"That company had a standing order for 26 cars daily for fuel coal, didn't it?" "I could not say."
"Who gave you the Preston stock?" "Joseph Aiken."
"Who is he?" "Chief clerk of the Monongahela division."
"How did he happen to do that?" "He just formed that company."
"How did other people come to give you the stock you tell of?" "I had been on that division since 1894 and they know me pretty well."

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the remainder of the article be printed in the RECORD without reading, as very few Senators are paying any attention to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The remainder of the article is as follows:

STILL MORE SHARES.

"How many shares of the Johnstown Coal Company's stock have you?" "Twelve."
"Where did you get it?" "I bought it for $240, $20 a share, when the company was formed."
"Whom did you buy it from?" "I paid a part of the money required to start the company."
"Is that all you ever paid on it?" "Yes."
"Has it paid dividends?" "Yes."
"Have the dividends paid back what you gave for the stock?" "Yes."
"Now, as to the Pittsburg company; whom did you buy them from?" "From Captain Hicks."
"Does the stock pay dividends?" "Yes."
"When did you buy it?" "In 1905."
"How much has it paid back?" "I don't know."
"How do you get the dividends?" "By check from Captain Hicks."
"Is that a dividend on the stock or just a bonus?" "It is a dividend."
"Is the stock full paid?" "No; I am still paying on it."
"How many shares have you in the Bowman company?" "Forty."
"How did you get that and when?" "I paid Captain Hicks $800 for it in 1897 or 1898. The par was $50."
"Did you get dividends?" "Yes."
"Often enough to pay back what you gave for it?" "Yes."
"How often?" "Once a month."
"What per cent did it pay annually?" "I don't know."

PUGH ON THE STAND.

Charles E. Pugh, second vice-president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, named a number of stocks he owned, but showed that he had paid good hard cash for them. An instance of this examination follows:

"Mr. Pugh, have you any interest in any coal property?" was asked. "Yes; I am a stockholder in the Blue Creek Coal Company."
"Where is that?" "In Cameron County on the Clearfield division. It is not an operating company and never has been. I have had the stock since 1903."
"You lease the land to an operating company?" "Yes."
"What company is that?"

Mr. Pugh did not reply to this, but instead went on with an explanation.

"The company has never paid any dividend. I got the stock in rather an unusual way. I paid $68 a share for seventy-four shares, and I would be glad to sell it now for $50 a share."
"Do you own stock in any other coal companies?" "I have nine bonds of $45 each in the Aroma Gas and Coal Company."
"How did you get that?" "I don't know. I didn't look them up. I remember that they expire next year, though."
"Who did you get them from?" "I don't know that, either; very likely from Colonel Huff."
"Did you pay for them?" "Yes."
"How much?" "I paid par for them. They are pretty good bonds, yielding 6 per cent interest."

SIDINGS WERE REFUSED.

In explaining the policy of refusing sidings to small and independent companies, Mr. Pugh said:

"Our policy may be subject to a little just criticism. We have refrained as far as possible from putting in some sidings, largely on the ground of excessive development in some regions, with the result that the production is largely in excess of the demand. This means the expense of collecting, and interferes with our operations.
"It did not seem to us that public requirements made them necesary, and we have not been very liberal about it."
"Your policy," said Mr. Glasgow, "is, then, that if a man wants a siding to develop his property, you tell him that you think there is enough coal in the market, and refuse him."
"Then if a man owned a tract of coal land along your lines and wanted to develop it, you told him that all the coal the market would take was being produced?" "Not exactly. We require a man to make representations as to what he could do in the way of finding a market. A siding is an expensive thing, you know."
"But the owner pays for the siding, doesn't he?" "Yes."
"Then your policy, briefly stated, has been to discourage sidings?" "Yes; generally so."
"Did you put in any sidings for the Keystone Company?" "Yes."
"Did you pay for them?" "On our right of way, yes; but not over their land."
"Did you put in any for the Cochran Company?" "I can't recall."
"Will you look that up and let us know later?" "I will."

TRIED TO DO FAIR THING.

Commissioner Clements then asked Mr. Pugh what he knew about car discrimination. He replied that as far as he knew the Pennsylvania Railroad Company had always tried to do the fair thing.

"We try to accommodate everybody, sir. I do not know of any applications to-day that are not being attended to."

Mr. Glasgow then produced several telegrams calling for special allotments of cars. They had Mr. Pugh's name attached.

One read:

December 20, 1902.

Commencing on Monday, give Latrobe Coal Company ten cars a day in preference to all others and in preference to company fuel.

PUGH.

Another:

December 9, 1902.

Give Ocean Coal Company ten cars in preference to other orders.

PUGH.

Yet another:

December 20, 1902.

Give Henrietta Coal Company five cars a day in preference to all others and company coal orders.

PUGH.

These messages were sent to R. L. O'Donnel by Mr. Pugh during the anthracite coal strike.

Mr. Pugh thus explained to the Commission: "There was some specially good reason for sending those messages—to relieve a gas house, an almshouse, or something like that."

"But how could other officials keep distribution of cars straight if you muddled things up in that manner?" asked Commissioner Clements.

"I don't know, but certain uncontrollable pressure at the time forced me to do it."

"I sent the messages," continued Mr. Pugh, "on the spur of the moment, I suppose. The pressure and urgency at the time was extreme, because of the anthracite strike, and we were annoyed a great deal by the shippers."

Commissioner Clements interjected: "Oh, yes, Mr. Pugh, we all know, as a matter of history, that it was during very strenuous times."

Mr. Pugh was then excused, and Alfred Huff, formerly interested in the Keystone Coal and Coke Company, was called. Mr. Glasgow asked the witness:

"Do you know of any payments made Pitcairn on account of the Keystone Coal and Coke Company?" "No; I don't know. I have not been connected with that company for thirteen years, as I told you yesterday."
"But haven't you heard that he got a stipulated percentage per ton of all coal hauled?" "I heard only that he was friendly to the Keystone's interests."
"You never heard of Pitcairn paying the coal company anything, did you?"
"No, sir."
"But you have heard of the coal company's paying Pitcairn, have you not?"
"Well; yes, sir."

CONTRADICTED EVIDENCE.

Mr. Wigton, although the last, was in many ways the most interesting witness of the day, and in many statements flatly contradicted evidence which has been given by railroad men.

He testified that during 1902 and 1903 when other companies were reaping enormous profits through the high prices for soft coal his mines were so starved that they could not even get cars to fulfill old obligations, and as a result actually lost $40,000 in importing coal from England to meet their contracts.

"What mines do you have in the Clearfield district?" "The Morrisdale, Madeira, and Maple."
"What have been the conditions with regard to Pennsylvania Railroad car service for five years past?" "Very unsatisfactory. They estimated our collieries at 8 per cent of the Clearfield output. That means 1,600 tons a day. The average daily supply of cars to us in the past four years has been 3½ cars. About 250 cars a day are shipped from the region. In 1902 prices began going up. At the same time the supply of cars to ourselves came very, very limited. It decreased to 2½ cars a day, when our capacity is 60 cars a day. We complained continually without effect, even to Vice-Presidents Pugh and Prevost. Finally we asked permission to buy private cars. They demurred at first, but finally consented to an order for 150 cars from the Allison works in this city. But these were never delivered until the spring of 1903. Meantime all through that winter our car supply averaged only 3 cars a day. It even prevented us from filling our contracts entered into at low prices the previous spring. Coal sold at $6 and $7 a ton, but we could sell none. It cost us $40,000 to import English coal to meet our obligations."
"Who is favored in your region?" "The Berwind-White Company is fully supplied with private cars."
"How did your production in 1903 and 1904 compare with Berwind-White?" "Ours was almost nothing. Theirs was normal."

AS TO THE REBATES.

As to rebates, the witness told of visiting former Superintendent Joyce's office in the Federal Broad street station and having handed over to him a check covering rebates for certain shipments. Lawyer Gowen, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, said that he felt sure that Mr. Wigton had made a mistake in the date of the transaction. In answer to many questions Mr. Wigton gave it as his opinion that private cars should be abolished and that all cars should be apportioned among the various mines according to their full working capacity.

He somewhat startled Railroad Counsel Gowen when he stated emphatically that railroads should not be allowed to use their power to force mine companies to sell them coal at reduced prices. He said railroads should be compelled to go in the market and buy coal like anyone else. He then showed how the railroads were able to discriminate against certain mine owners in the distribution of cars by the placing of the so-called "fuel cars" for company orders.

Although his company owns 150 private cars, he declared they were an evil and that the Morrisdale Coal Company were forced to buy them or go to the wall. The little fellow who could not buy them, he said, did go to the wall. He gave several instances of this and also mentioned the case of the Saltsburg mine, which, in the possession of certain railroad interests, is now a paying property, but which a number of years ago, when he had an interest in it, was not paying because he could not get cars from the railroad.

He also said that the Pennsylvania Railroad was ruining the Clearfield district by charging a rate on tidewater coal that prohibited any competition with the coal shipped from southern points over the Norfolk and Western and Chesapeake and Ohio roads. He also contrasted the Pennsylvania Railroad's policy with the method pursued by the New York Central Railroad to the disadvantage of the Pennsylvania company.

SUPERINTENDENT TRUMP ON STAND.

General Superintendent of Transportation Trump was called to the stand, and in part his examination was as follows:

"You were stationed at Altoona during 1904?" "Yes, sir."

"I understand that the number of cars available each day is announced by you to Mr. Creighton. You instruct him as to the number of cars that are to go out to the several divisions. Now, tell us your method of distribution, beginning with 1903."

Mr. Trump then made an explanation which showed that the distribution was at the early period largely arbitrary.

Coming down to a later period, Mr. Trump said that Mr. Creighton had had charge of the distribution of cars from the latter part of 1903 to the present time.

"Are you not mistaken as to that? Between the time that Mr. Patterson took charge and he handed it over to Mr. Creighton, did the allotment system run any old way?" queried Mr. Glasgow. Witness replied:

"You do not understand." He added that owing to the large ownership of private cars the distribution of cars worked automatically. He said that no elaborate allotment system was thought necessary.

"Why, then, did you adopt and put into force a system of distribution on January 1, 1906?"

Mr. Trump's initial explanation of the system now in effect was, broadly, that it was a very elaborate system.

SYSTEM IS SUGGESTED.

"Why don't you, Mr. Trump, prepare a system that will show, for example, that John Smith or John Jones got so many cars and were entitled to so many? Would it not help publicity and stop a lot of dissatisfaction among operators, especially among small concerns? Can't you do it?" "No, sir."

"Why? Then what's the use of sheets?" "The sheets were posted up at the suggestion of the Pennsylvania Coal and Coke Company. Cars can not be distributed the same daily because of the fluctuating demand."

"Do you allow a man to keep cars for an indefinite period?" asked Commissioner Cockrell. "Yes, sir; at the coal mines we do."

"Well, then, he can make a dining room or a kitchen out of your cars, can he not?" "Yes, sir; if he so desires. The cars must go to the mines asking for them."

Mr. Glasgow: "Are individual cars charged against the percentages of distribution to the Jamison Coal Company, the Keystone Coal and Coke Company, and the Berwind-White Company?" "Yes, sir."

"Why?" "Because we decided to do it."

"Yes, Mr. Trump; but why, why?" "Because, sir, we were attacked by the Pennsylvania Coal and Coke Company in our position as distributing agents."

SYSTEM WAS ATTACKED.

"Why did you charge operators against percentages after January, 1906?" asked Commissioner Cockrell. "No special reason, sir."

"Was it not because of criticism of your former methods, sir?" "Yes; I suppose it was."

"Then the dissatisfaction because of discrimination led up to it, eh?" "Yes, sir; I think so."

Witness's attention was called to the fact that the Pennsylvania Railroad had adopted an "arbitrary" rule that it would not handle private cars unless 500 or over were used.

"That was a rule adopted to discourage the use of private cars," answered witness.

"But it only discouraged the smaller companies and shippers from owning and using private cars?" "Our thought was that it would eliminate the private car."

"Why, don't you know, my dear man, that in the most strenuous period of the Pennsylvania Railroad's coal traffic, when coal was bringing the highest prices in the history of the trade, that the Berwind-White Company bought 1,000 cars from the railroad and the Keystone Coal Company 500?"

The witness volunteered no knowledge or information regarding the alleged sales.

"Why don't you people put yourselves beyond criticism, do business in the open light," said Commissioner Cockrell, "so that there will be no trouble of this sort? If there are any suspicions that you are doing anything wrong, why don't you furnish statements to shippers that will show them just what's what? Be honest with everybody alike."

Mr. Trump replied that his company is trying to do "the fair thing by all," but that "it is very difficult to please everybody."

Mr. Gowen then asked Mr. Trump to explain his interest in the Keystone Coal and Coke Company. Witness replied that the 400 shares he owned reverted to him when the Carrier company and the Madison company, in which he had been interested, were taken over by the Keystone people.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that unless this provision stays in the bill and the Interstate Commerce Commission can prescribe the books to be used and allow no others to be kept, we can never stop such stealing and such rascality as that laid bare in the article just read. Here the whole Pennsylvania Railroad system is shown to be permeated with rottenness, from Cassatt down, rebates being given, bribes being taken, and every other kind of rascality——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. LODGE. On page 33 of the bill it is provided that—

It shall be unlawful for such carriers to keep any other accounts, records, or memoranda than those prescribed or approved by the Commission.

That provision, I understand, the Senator from Montana proposes to leave untouched.

Mr. CARTER. Untouched.

Mr. LODGE. But he proposes by his amendment on page 34 to relieve from any penalty the carriers that violate that prohibition. It seems to me, Mr. President, as I said the other day, when we had this amendment under consideration as in Committee of the Whole, that these clauses in this section are really the most important in the bill, because it is under these clauses regulating the accounting that we must look to get the evidence to sustain any prosecution. If these clauses are modified, if the penalty is removed from prohibitions actually left in the bill, they will become, to my mind, singularly inefficacious.

I do not desire to delay this debate, but I think it will be most unfortunate to meddle with the House provisions in regard to accounting. I think they are valuable provisions. I think it is no hardship to keep honest accounts on a uniform plan; and the way the law is to be enforced is through the provisions of this section. I trust it may be left unamended, as it came from the House.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, a few days ago I offered an amendment when the bill was being considered as in Committee of the Whole, providing for an increase of the salary of the secretary of the Commission, Mr. Edward A. Moseley. A motion was made to lay the amendment on the table, and I had no opportunity then of making any remarks in support of it.

Mr. LODGE. We have not reached that section yet.

Mr. ELKINS. I am speaking now to the amendment now under consideration.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from West Virginia will allow me, we ought to reach that section in a moment. That whole amendment will be open. It has not been reached in the Senate.

Mr. ELKINS. I want to make this statement in anticipation of an amendment I will make later on to increase Mr. Moseley's salary.

Mr. President, I have known Mr. Moseley ever since the organization of the Commission. He has been its secretary and an efficient, able, and faithful one. In addition to the duties of that office he has helped in organizing the Commission under the new law of 1887 and under the subsequent acts and rendered faithful service. In addition to this, Mr. President, he has had the confidence of the executive departments of the Government and the President.

For seventeen years he was the disbursing officer of the Commission, and although the duties of that office were no part of his duties as secretary, he never accepted the compensation of $500 per year for this service voted to him by the Commission.

Mr. Moseley was appointed assistant recorder of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission by President Roosevelt and, at the request of the Commission, became its disbursing officer. All the money expended by the Commission until Congress made provision, which it was doubtful they would do, was provided by Mr. Moseley on his personal security alone, he thereby assuming the great risk of Congress not making any appropriation for the expenditures of the Commission.

During the American occupation of Cuba, at the request of the governor-general of that island, Mr. Moseley was sent by the United States Government to assist in drawing a railroad law, to fix a classification of articles of freight, formulate rules of practice, and to fix railroad rates. This work was so satisfactorily performed that the military governor, General Wood, in his report, said:

Mr. Moseley kindly consented to come to Cuba, at my request, and spent much time in the careful consideration of the proposed law. Mr. Moseley made a second visit in order to take part with the railway commission in the preparation of the railway tariffs as set forth in Order No. 117 and the rules of procedure before the commission as set forth in Order No. 61.

Mr. Moseley's work was extremely valuable and of great assistance. His vast experience as secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission and his clear judgment in all matters involved was of immense assistance in rounding out the law, and he virtually directed the regulations embodied in Order No. 117 (relating to railroad tariffs). He also largely influenced the provisions of Order No. 61 (official classification of articles of freight, rules of practice before the railroad commission in cases and proceedings under the railroad law).

For his valuable work in connection with drafting the railroad law of Cuba Mr. Moseley was informed by those in authority that they would be pleased to pay him some $5,000 out of the revenues of the Cuban treasury, and it was urged upon him that he could properly accept it. Mr. Moseley, however, refused, stating that all his services—time and energy—belonged to the United States Government wherever employed, and that, being assigned to work in Cuba, all he was entitled to was his actual living and traveling expenses.

Mr. Moseley has received the thanks of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts "for disinterested services in the cause of humanity."

Under this bill which we are about to pass, unanimously I hope, there will be new duties laid upon the Commission. The initiative of organizing, prescribing forms and methods of procedure, etc., will largely fall upon the secretary, and it seems to me that, owing to these enlarged duties and his past record for fidelity and efficiency, we should increase his salary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent of the Senate in order to express more fully, by adding a few sentences to the remarks I was proceeding to make when I was cut off very properly by the Chair, my fifteen minutes having expired when I was in the midst of a thought. Of course I took my seat recognizing the propriety of the interruption, but it left me in the air. I could take another occasion to complete the train of thought I was pursuing and to add the citations, but, if there is no objection, I should like to have permission to make such an addition to my remarks.

Mr. LODGE. What is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is that the Senator may be permitted to add a few words to the speech which he was not able to conclude by reason of the Chair calling time on him.

Mr. DANIEL. A few sentences, I would say, Mr. President, and proper citations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia? The Chair hears none.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 24, on page 35, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, adopted the following amendment:

That any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company receiving property for transportation from a point in one State to a point in another State shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor and shall be liable to the holder thereof for any loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or by any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company to which such property may be delivered or over whose line or lines such property may pass, and no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation shall exempt such common carrier, railroad, or transportation company from the liability herein imposed: Provided, That nothing in this section shall deprive any holder of such receipt or bill of lading of any remedy or right of action which he has under existing law.

That the common carrier, railroad, or transportation company issuing such receipt or bill of lading shall be entitled to recover from the common carrier, railroad, or transportation company through whose negligence the loss, damage, or injury shall have been sustained the amount of such loss, damage, or injury as it may be required to pay to the owners of such property.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 36, after line 19, to strike out down to and including line 19, on page 37, being section 8.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. RAYNER obtained the floor.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, one day this week when an amendment was offered to the railroad rate bill embodying the principle of House bill 239, then before the Interstate Commerce Committee, the question was asked whether that bill would be reported this week. I ask unanimous consent to report, out of order, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 239) relating to liability of common carriers by railroads in the District of Columbia and Territories and common carriers by railroads engaged in commerce between the States and between the States and foreign nations to their employees, and to submit a report thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will go to the Calendar.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 13938. An act to extend the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, to the port of Oswego, N. Y., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 18750. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PORT OF OSWEGO, N. Y.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. FRYE). I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13938) to extend the privileges of the seventh section of the act approve June 10, 1880, to the port of Oswego, N. Y., to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS PEND D'OREILLE RIVER, WASHINGTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6128) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pend d'Oreille River, in Stevens County, Wash., by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, which was, in line 6, after the word "wagon," to insert "railroad and foot."

Mr. PILES. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRY SISTRUNK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1739) granting a pension to Henry Sistrunk; which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twelve" and insert "eight."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

ISAAC L. DUGGAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5670) granting an increase of pension to Isaac L. Duggar; which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty" and insert "sixteen."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

LANDS IN MENA, ARK.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5913) to authorize the sale of certain lands to the city of Mena, in the county of Polk, in the State of Arkansas. I make the request because I will not be in my seat next Monday.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Mena, Ark., for the sum of $2.50 per acre the fractional northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 6, township No. 2 south, range 30 west, of the fifth principal meridian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I note the absence of a quorum, and as we are approaching the final stage of this long siege we have had trying to get the bill through, I should like to have a better attendance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allee	Clarke, Ark.	Gearin	Nixon
Allison	Clay	Hale	Overman
Ankeny	Crane	Hansbrough	Penrose
Bacon	Cullom	Hemenway	Perkins
Bailey	Daniel	Knox	Pettus
Berry	Dick	La Follette	Piles
Beveridge	Dillingham	Latimer	Rayner
Blackburn	Dolliver	Lodge	Scott
Brandegee	Dryden	Long	Simmons
Bulkeley	Elkins	McCreary	Smoot
Burkett	Flint	McCumber	Spooner
Burnham	Foraker	McLaurin	Stone
Carmack	Foster	Mallory	Taliaferro
Carter	Frazier	Martin	Teller
Clapp	Frye	Millard	Tillman
Clark, Mont.	Fulton	Morgan	Warner
Clark, Wyo.	Gallinger	Nelson

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCOTT in the chair). Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I desire unanimous consent to offer an amendment, simply to correct the RECORD. In reading over the RECORD I observe that on day before yesterday, when I sent up an amendment to the desk several words which could not be well read were left out. As the amendment appears in the RECORD it is not intelligible. I therefore offer it as it was written simply that it may appear correct in the RECORD.

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not need to go back upon the vote of the Senate. All he need ask is that the amendment be corrected in the RECORD.

Mr. DANIEL. That is all sufficient. Is that consent given?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

The amendment as corrected is as follows:

SEC. —. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, however, That upon application to the Commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the Commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the Commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act: Provided also, That no discrimination shall be made by allowance of a lesser charge for a longer than a shorter haul in favor of any points or localities against other points or localities where natural conditions and advantages are substantially similar.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I have arisen at this stage of the proceedings for the simple purpose of saying that I shall vote for this measure with hesitation and with a great degree of reluctance. I feel this way because I think, with great deference to the Senators who think otherwise, that the clause in this bill which gives jurisdiction to the Federal courts to try these cases is absolutely fatal to the bill. This clause impairs its efficiency and destroys its usefulness. And I want to say right here, so that it can be indelibly imprinted in the RECORD, that I enter my solemn and earnest protest against the insertion of that provision.

Now, that is the first reason why I have arisen. The second one is quite different. I believe that the President of the United States before this proceeding is over will change his mind again about what is known as the Allison amendment. There was a rumor current in Washington last night, and it was verified to some extent this morning, although I do not convey it to the Senate as authentic—do not know whether it is true or not—that the President had been in consultation with lawyers who are not concerned in this controversy upon one side or the other, and that they have given him an impartial opinion that the amendment known as the Allison amendment is the broadest sort of review that it is possible to confer upon the Federal courts, and that the President is deliberating over it.

I think it was Addison who some time ago said "the woman that deliberates is lost." I do not think there is any possibility of losing the President, but who knows that within the next few days some Chandler, at this moment "to fortune and to fame unknown," may not get possession of the President and tide him over the breakwater of this amendment back again to the landing of the Long amendment, whence he started? I am not here, and I want it distinctly understood, for the purpose of abusing the President of the United States, or for the purpose of saying one word that is either distasteful or improper. I think I know the limitations in a matter of this sort, and I propose to observe them and to confine myself within them. But I can not for a moment understand the course that the President has taken upon this subject. His mind appears to be like an unadjusted kaleidoscope. You have to shake it up frequently before its reflecting surfaces exhibit its beautiful colors and its symmetrical forms, and then, when you have it all adjusted and focused, it sometimes flies off into its original fragments and resolves itself into its component parts. He appears to me to be on this proposition like a cometic body that is tearing its way through the solar system without orbit and without circuit, illuminating the horizon in its march of fire, but absolutely oblivious where it came from and absolutely indifferent as to where it is going.

Of course, Mr President, we are living in an age of natural disturbances, and the President may be somewhat jealous of these volcanic eruptions and earthquakes and does not desire them to have everything to themselves. He wants to get in the game a little himself; and I think it would have been better if my friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], when he opened, indirectly, negotiations with the President upon this subject, would have had in his room of "the Five Tribes of Civilized Indians" the instrument known as the seismograph, to record the vibrations and undulations at the White House, so that he could have posted himself properly about these aberrations as they successively took place. He does not realize that the President believes in the maxim that "a man is a fool who does not change his mind every twenty-four hours." I believe—and I say it in no sense of humor, but with an absolute spirit of sincerity—that if the Speaker of the House of Representatives will nominate a strong man on the conference committee, a man who has the courage of his convictions and is willing to go down rather than surrender them, and who will stand by the original constitutional amendment submitted on the President's behalf by the Senator from Kansas, the President will change his mind and say that all his support of the Allison amendment and all this telephonic communication between himself and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr LODGE] were all a fable and a myth, and that the newspapers which reported them were all guilty of a deliberate and unqualified falsehood.

I am not going into his motives. I am willing to attribute his actions to the very best motives. I am absolutely unwilling to attribute them to a dishonest motive. I am absolutely unwilling to attribute them to any selfish motive for the purpose of personal gain. But from what I know and what I would be at liberty to speak of, if I so desired, I believe that the President's principal motive was to unite his party on the floor of the Senate. Well, he may have united his party on this floor, but, Mr. President, he has unhappily divided the people.

Now, I want to say one word before passing to this amendment. I wish to say to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], whom we all admire and respect, that I think he believes that this amendment is a proper amendment and that it does not carry anything with it except the constitutional review as expressed by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] yesterday. I want to say to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] that I think all of these charges which have been insinuated—I am not now speaking of any charges from the President, but from anywhere—against these Senators are unjust, because in my judgment both of them have contributed as much to the elucidation of this question as any other Senators upon the Republican side of the Chamber.

Before going any further I wish to say to the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], whom I have loyally and consistently followed in the progress of this controversy, that from its inception to its completion he has been actuated by the highest motives and has followed this legislation with a most steadfast and unwavering purpose. Let me say one word about this without disclosing anything anybody has said to me on the subject. It needs not my corroboration to sustain the character of the Senator from Texas upon this floor. The Senator from Texas offered two amendments—first, in reference to the issuance of a prohibitive injunction, denying the courts the right to issue any suspending order until the case was tried. The next amendment was an amendment framing for the courts a constitutional review. There has never been a moment of time when the Senator from Texas has been willing to compromise upon a line or a letter of either of those amendments or willing to surrender any of the principles that they embody.

Now, what have we? I want the attention of the lawyers of the Senate, because when the Supreme Court tries this case I want you all to recollect this. I may be mistaken about it, but I want you all to recall the fact, when the Supreme Court takes up this case—and it will take it up very quickly after this bill is passed, because the railroads will immediately get up a case, and they will go into court, and they will employ the best counsel they can, and they will raise the question, first in the inferior courts and then in the Supreme Court, that under this amendment the court must review the entire question in all its details—I want you to recollect that, standing here in my capacity, I say that that provision is worse than the provision which you have in the present law; that this law, with this provision in it, makes this law more inefficient than the present law, and that whenever a case goes into the courts the courts will not limit themselves to the question whether or not the property of the carrier has been taken without just compensation, but they will try the whole question from the beginning to the completion, as if no such body as the Interstate Commerce Commission ever existed.

I do not believe that any tyro who has ever read his profession would not agree with me in the statement I have made, if he gives the slightest impartial study to the question.

Now, just one word. I am anxious about this legislation——

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. If it is the deliberate judgment of the Senator from Maryland that the bill, as it has been perfected by these amendments, is less efficient than the present law, I ask him whether he will vote for or against the passage of the bill?

Mr. RAYNER. That is the old question put to me here on this floor—whether I am going to vote for the bill. I am going to vote for the bill. Yes; I am going to vote for it. What else can I do?

Mr. HOPKINS. When you believe——

Mr. RAYNER. I am speaking of this provision. This bill has a number of amendments in it, if the Senator from Illinois will allow me to say so, that are very beneficial. You take the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. That is a good amendment, although made by a Senator who has been charged with being a railroad Senator. We have had help from Senators who have been charged with being railroad Senators in clearing up the mysteries of this legislation.

So, in answer to the Senator from Illinois, I will say that some of the best legislation has been put on the bill by the Senator from West Virginia, and notably by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. The amendment of the Senator from North Dakota supplementing this bill is an excellent provision. I am talking now of this clause. I say that this particular provision makes the bill in this regard worse than the similar provision of the law as it now exists, and I want to see whether I can not demonstrate that proposition, if the Senator from Illinois will give me his attention. I may be wrong; it is only an opinion; but why should I give an opinion here unless I believe in it? I believe in this legislation, and I want to say right here, if you will permit me, that I think that the question of a broad review or a narrow review is a question that is open to controversy—whether we ought to give the courts the constitutional review or the broad review. There is a good deal to be said upon both sides of that question.

I have always been for the constitutional review. I can understand why the Senators from New England have not been particularly favorable to this legislation. If I was in their situation I might occupy the same ground. The New England railroads are the best administered railroads of the country, and it does not require a railroad rate bill to enable them honestly and efficiently to conduct the affairs of their corporation. The most intelligent witness on the stand before the Interstate Commerce Committee—I do not know whether I recollect his name, but I think his name was Mr. Tuttle, of the Boston and Maine Railroad——

Mr. FRYE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. RAYNER. I want to say this because I want to be fair about this matter, and I do not want to state anything that is not fair to everybody. If I recollect aright, Mr. Tuttle said his road never had a case before the Interstate Commerce Commission. In other words, no one had ever made a complaint against the railroad, either on the ground of unjust or unreasonable rates or upon the ground of undue discrimination. I have further learned, since I have been on this floor, that there has not been a legitimate case for injuries brought against that road. The road does not go into court at all, but settles such cases upon a fair and equitable basis.

I can understand why the Senators from New England have not been enthusiastic in support of a measure that they do not need, perhaps, in their section of the country, and why they want the courts, in case the Commission should give an unjust decision against the railroads, to review the whole case.

I can understand why the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] believes that the courts ought to have a full review. If I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania—and I have been enlightened by him during the whole discussion, because I sit in close contact with him—the Senator from Pennsylvania believes that, under the Constitution, it is necessary to give them a broad review. The Senator from Pennsylvania takes the ground that, under the sceond section of Article III of the Constitution—a section that has hardly been discussed in the Senate—the courts of the United States not only have the right to try the constitutionality of the matter, but they have the right to enter into the question whether it violates the laws of the United States, and that the question whether or not the Commission has the right to fix the rate in accordance with our reasonable standard is a question that necessarily goes to the courts under Article III, section 2, of the Constitution. I do not agree with this view, however. I will ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether I have not accurately described his views upon that subject?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I beg pardon of the Senator. Did he put a question to me?

Mr. RAYNER. I do not want to annoy you at all, but I merely meant to ask you whether that is not your view, as it is the view a great many lawyers entertain besides yourself—lawyers not of greater eminence, but of equal eminence, with the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. It is impossible for the Senator from Maryland to annoy me; but, unfortunately, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] had diverted my mind for an instant while he was putting the question, so that I did not catch it.

Mr. RAYNER. I will put the question. I did not know whether the Senator heard that part of it, but I said I have been very much edified by sitting close to him during the whole discussion, and I hope we will not get over on the other side in a hurry. I said that you are of the opinion, as I understood you, that it is necessary, under the second section of Article III of the Constitution, to vest in the inferior courts the right to try the question whether or not there has been a violation of any law of the United States by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. KNOX. That is not exactly the position that I stated. My position at all times has been this, and I endeavored to make it perfectly clear in the fifth section of the bill I proposed and in the remarks I made subsequent to the Senate upon the general subject: I contended that the parties had the right, or should have the right, to go into court to maintain an action against the Commission where they thought the action of the Commission violated their rights. I never used the term "broad review" or "narrow review" in all my life. I think there has been a great deal of intelligent expression on this subject. My motion was that this law could not and ought not either to expand or to restrict the rights of parties, but that whatever those rights were they should be submitted to the court, and if they were merely constitutional the court would apply the test of the Constitution, and if they were statutory the court would apply the test of the statute.

Mr. RAYNER. That is precisely what I meant to say in a little different language, that the courts would try the statutory question when the Commission had fixed a rate, whether that rate had been made in accordance with the reasonable standard legislated for by Congress.

Mr. KNOX. I simply contended for that which is now in the bill, namely, that the court should have the jurisdiction to try the right of parties when they brought a suit.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I have never believed in this kind of jurisdiction, although, as I have said, I am perfectly willing to give credit to every Senator upon this floor, and before I forget it, to the senior Senator from Ohio, because if there is a man who has stood up here honestly for his convictions from the beginning of this struggle it has been the senior Senator from Ohio. While it is said that "all the world loves a lover," I say that all the world loves a man who loves his convictions, even if he is wrong, and the Senator will come out of this struggle perhaps with greater credit than some of the people who have been deriding him. This is an open question. Every man upon this floor has tried to do his duty as he best perceives it. Some of us think differently from others. I stood out for the suspension against injunction as set forth in the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] because I believed in it. Other Senators upon this floor voted against it because they believed it violated the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. But it is particularly with this clause that I am now concerned that I shall now quote:

> And jurisdiction to hear and determine such suits is hereby vested in such courts.

> Look, in this place, ran Cassius' dagger through;
> See what a rent the envious Casca made.

Do you tell me that you can give the courts an unlimited venue over every suit that could be brought and then give them unlimited jurisdiction of equal degree and latitude with a venue, and that you can then circumscribe the courts and the jurisdiction that they are to assume? In all the arguments that I have heard on this floor, and I do not mean to underrate them, I have heard none except from the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG]—all men of great ability. I have not heard a word, however, from the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], nor a word from the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], two gentlemen of such eminent standing in their profession that their construction upon statutes or upon the Constitution would be recognized certainly by the American bar in vindication or defense of that provision as embodying a constitutional review.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], who has followed this cause with unbending integrity of purpose, whose power we all admit, and whose unflinching honesty we all admire, said no longer than yesterday that under this provision the courts would have the right to examine all the evidence that was thrown into them, but when it came to administer relief they would have only the right to administer constitutional relief. I should like to ask the junior Senator from Iowa from what principle of law he derives such a construction and interpretation as that?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I derive it——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I derive that construction from the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the Milwaukee Railroad, recorded in volume 176 of the United States Reports, where no questions were raised in the circuit court except constitutional questions, and where the circuit court undertook to investigate all the facts, and the Supreme Court sent the whole matter back to have the entire question entered into by a master in chancery, notwithstanding the fact that there was no issue pending except the constitutionality of the act of the legislature of South Dakota.

Mr. RAYNER. But I say to the Senator from Iowa this does not affect the question at all. I respectfully submit this to him. I am quite sure the Senator is sincere, and I am doing it for the purpose, perhaps in a vain hope that some man may yet arise who will bring the President back to where he started from, and that when this conference is held some one man on the other side of the Chamber or in the House of Representatives will admonish the President that there is yet time to repent, and that we can get back to the only provision that will give life and vitality to this measure.

You place in the courts the right to try every case without limitation, to annul, suspend, enjoin, set aside the order of the Commission; and then when you give your jurisdiction you say not one word about what jurisdiction the court shall take. Having the right to give it either the constitutional jurisdiction or the statutory jurisdiction, you leave it absolutely unlimited; and when the cases go to the courts the court will hold, and I will stake my professional reputation upon it, that the case is inquirable into in the same manner as if it had never been brought before the Interstate Commerce Commission. And I want to see whether I can not demonstrate this to the Senator from Iowa before I have completed this argument.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield for a question?

Mr. RAYNER. I will yield.

Mr. NELSON. After we have in the United States circuit court jurisdiction of the case have we the power to prescribe to that court how it shall decide the case or what relief we shall give?

Mr. RAYNER. I do not want to make a rash proposition to the Senator from Minnesota, but I will stop practicing my profession if they have not the right to do it, and I will leave it to any impartial lawyer in the land and give you the right to select him. Why not? From the case in 8 Howard up to the present moment there is an unbroken line of Federal authorities that we can divide the jurisdiction in the inferior courts. That is the point that I am discussing. That is the point that the Senator from Iowa has not discussed, not because the Senator from Iowa is not able to discuss it, because he is fully able to discuss it, but he seems to think that he ought not to branch out here as a great constitutional lawyer; and I think he knows just as much of constitutional law as any of us, and perhaps a little more than some of us.

Let me have the Constitution just a minute, because this is a very interesting proposition. I have some hopes of the Senator from Iowa yet, if he is put upon that conference committee. I know his position. Perhaps I would do the same thing. I do not know how I would be placed if I was situated as he was, between my convictions and my allegiance to my party. I think I would let my allegiance to my party go. I have let it go many a time when it conflicted with my convictions.

Let me show the Senator from Minnesota what I mean. Unless I have forgotten the rudimentary principles of my profession—I have heard so much bad law from some quarters since I have been in the Senate that I am commencing to forget everything I knew about it.

SECTION II.

The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority—to all cases affecting ambassadors, etc.

We have a perfect right to say to the inferior courts what part of this jurisdiction we will vest in them. That is not a question of judicial power, that was so well discussed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. This has nothing to do with judicial power. This is a distribution of jurisdiction. I want now some Senator upon this floor who is versed and experienced in his profession to rise and say that we have not the right to invest in the inferior courts any part of this jurisdiction—if we want to clothe them with it—the constitutional or the statutory jurisdiction, either jurisdiction or both. No one will say it, because, as I have said, the Supreme Court authorities are uniform upon the proposition. Now, what do you do?

The senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] explained this matter with such artistic skill and cut so deep with the surgeon's knife into this provision, that I can not add anything to what he said upon the subject, and I do not intend to detract anything from what he said. He explained that there was a difference between territorial jurisdiction and legal jurisdiction; that the right to name a place where a suit is to be tried is one thing, but to vest that court with the right to try cases is another thing.

I have taken no umbrage at anything that the Senator from Iowa has said about constitutional lawyers. No one can take any umbrage at anything the Senator from Iowa says. He says the most cruel things in the most pleasant and attractive manner. He cuts deep with his Damascus blade, and then he pours over it such an assuaging balm that you really feel as if you were in a perfect paradise of pleasure while you writhe under the agonies that his wounds produce. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupants of the galleries will please maintain order.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator from Iowa reproaches a constitutional lawyer. I want to say one thing about the constitutional lawyer, and only a few words, too. When I speak of the constitutional lawyer I mean the man who has read that instrument, who understands its history and its traditions, and who has familiarized himself with the judicial decisions that sometimes darken and sometimes illumine its provisions. I say that those men will be the men of the future who will steer this Republic on to the accomplishment of its immortal destiny, and the men who believe that this Government exists without restraint or limitation either for the general welfare of its own people or for the purpose of promoting the unlimited happiness of the human race are the men who, if you put them as pilots on the ship of state, will sink her on the rocks and reefs.

Now, Mr. President, to get back just for a moment to this provision. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON], who is not in his seat, claims to be the author of this provision. If I were in his place and if I had been the author of it I would not have said anything about it. I would have kept the secret to myself. I hope the Senator from Oregon may stay here just as long as his State is a Republican State, but when in the place he has honored the courts are deciding that these cases are being taken away from the Commission and put into the hands of the court it may not add any additional luster upon his renown.

The Senator says that he conceived the idea. I do not know whether it was an original thought or whether it was a revealed communication, and if it was an original thought I do not know whether it came to him by inspiration or whether it was the result of mature reflection.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] is looking over in my direction. I do not know whether the Senator from Montana wants to interrupt me, but in the course of his remarks the other day he said that he had looked over my Congressional record some fifteen years ago and had found that I had not offered any railroad legislation. I have looked over the Senator's record in Congress, and I find that he never offered anything of any sort at all. [Laughter.] I suppose it is a great deal better that he has not done it, because there are men who offer the least and speak the least who do the most. I do not now refer to the eighty-seven speeches that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has made on this subject. I think there were eighty-seven I counted in the RECORD, all of them as bright and attractive as they possibly could be. But sometimes men who speak the least are the men who really do the most. It would have been just as appropriate for me to have offered railroad legislation in the Congress I was in as it would have been at that time to have offered a bill for the annexation of the Philippine Islands or to declare war against Spain or any other subject the Senator could think of.

I never could understand why the Senator from Montana would not let the Senator from Oregon take all these honors to himself about this broad review, why he wanted to participate in the glory of the day.

The Senator from Oregon says that the constitutional review would have crippled it. How would it have crippled it? I ask some Senator upon this floor how it would have crippled it? Of course I am not asking the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. I know he thinks it would have crippled it, because he wants the court to try the whole measure. The Senator from Oregon says that to strike out the words "in its judgment" cripples it. Mr. President, I took no part in the debate this morning, because it is a difficult thing to debate a proposition of law in fifteen minutes. But I say this, that you have done the best work you have done in this whole session in adopting the amendment of the Senator from Colorado striking out the words "in its judgment."

The senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] had the courtesy to ask me before the Senate met this morning what I thought about those words. I said to him, "Strike them out, because they are either surplusage or they are dangerous. If they are surplusage we do not need them, and if they are dangerous we could not afford to have them." But the Senator from Oregon is mistaken when he says that I crippled the bill by my vote to strike out three words, absolutely fatal to this bill, because they vested in this Commission a legislative discretion, covered by the opinion in the case of Field v. Clark.

I tell you what I believe, Mr. President. I have never seen a day in all the history of Federal jurisprudence, from the earliest to the latest moment, from the hour that Marshall first laid his hands upon the Constitution and back to Ellsworth and to Rutledge and to Jay, when the Supreme Court of the United States, whatever other errors it may have committed and whatever other questionable and unsatisfactory decisions it may have rendered, ever deprived a citizen of this land of his life or his liberty or his property without due process of law or ever sanctioned the taking of private property for public use without just compensation.

> Touch not Saguntum.
> On that rock we stand.
> When that rock disintegrates, we perish.

Whatever other changes may have been wrung upon us, that clause of the Constitution has always remained inviolate and intact, and I do not believe the day will ever come when any sacrilegious hand will blast or hew it down.

Mr. President, one word more. You have gone beyond the provision of the Constitution, and you have made a provision which keeps these cases pendulating and vibrating between the Commission and the courts. The Commission decides; the court reverses. It can not even make a legal suggestion as to the course the Commission ought to pursue. And the Commission decides again, and the court reverses again, and thus the cases vibrate between the Commission and the courts until when the moment arrives for the shipper to obtain practical relief conditions have changed and limitations run.

Will you permit me now, because it will take but a minute, to give you an illustration of this broad difference? Let me take a line of cases with which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] is perfectly familiar—the water-competition cases. The Commission decided the question of competition between railroads and water carriers. This case went to the courts, and what do the courts do? Did they decide whether or not the railroad has been deprived of just compensation? They decided the whole case of competition. They went into every little detail, consuming hundreds of pages of testimony.

I say, Mr. President, we have been here for months toiling and struggling to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and now, by one fell swoop, you practically divest it of its rate-making power. You do not even give it the authority of a grand jury or of a committing magistrate; you simply convert it into an advisory body, and then you do not permit it to communicate the facts upon which its advice was given to the courts that are officially to review them. It would not express it to say that the President has debilitated this Commission; he has mutilated it; he has dismantled it; he has turned its proceedings into a parody and a burlesque.

Let me say to the honest friends of railroad legislation, in conclusion—and I say it, I hope, with becoming modesty and a proper degree of reservation—that while in one paragraph you have animated and inspired the Commission with life in this review, accepted by the President, in the next paragraph you have strangled it and sentenced it to die. You have in one section conferred upon it the rate-making power, and in the very next section you have devitalized it and winged the shaft that quivered in its heart.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I have regard enough for the weariness of the Senate to occupy only a minute or two in the closing hour of this discussion. I expect to vote for this bill because I believe in it and regard it as an efficient step in the direction of national control of interstate commerce. I confess that if I felt about it as my honorable friend from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] says he feels; if I regarded it as unconstitutional and worthless and a parody upon legislation, I would not be able to assume the enthusiasm which carries him in the direction of an affirmative vote in favor of the bill.

We have now been engaged for nearly three months in its discussion, and I confess very cheerfully that I am glad that we see the end of it. It is not revolutionary or dangerous legislation calculated to destroy or even to disturb the business welfare of the American people. It will have their approval, because it takes a long delayed step toward that control of the instrumentalities of commerce without which the market place can be trampled under the feet of the corporate organizations, which ought to be its faithful and obedient servants.

The debate in this Chamber has been only a counterpart of the larger discussion which has gone on throughout the country, in city and village and township alike. I have felt the same satisfaction which has been expressed by others in the character of the discussion which has been conducted here. And in the greater forum, in the broader arena in which public opinion has found expression, the question has been taken up with an intelligence and an earnestness of purpose thoroughly characteristic of a community educated for generations in the art of self-government. The original friends of this measure, those who assumed the responsibility for its preparation, and who through long days and nights devoted their strength to the labor of framing it and presenting it to both houses of Congress are ready to take the judgment of the Senate upon it and the judgment of the American people.

This bill will be judged by the standard of what it undertakes to do. We do not set up the claim that its provisions are the end of all wisdom in dealing with the railway problem. We are content if in practical operation the law is found to secure an effective regulation of the rate-making power. The bill does not pretend to offer a solution to all the questions which a half century of national indifference and neglect have raised. If it is a reproach to the framers of this measure that they have recognized the importance of so framing it as to secure the support of the committees of Congress and, incidentally, of a majority of the Members of the two Houses, they will have to bear the criticism with resignation and patience. Our Government is a government of the people, through their representatives; and while I would not contend that our business here is to throw away our own judgment or cast aside the convictions of our own consciences in a blind shifting of legislative responsibilities upon the public at large; still, on the whole, it can not disparage the tradition of either House of Congress if the mature judgment of the American people is given that authority in our deliberations which is the very essence of our political institutions.

I do not propose in these closing hours of the debate to enter into a defense either of the Senate or of the President of the United States. These matters are now of record. But I will say to my honorable friend from Maryland that there are millions of good people in the United States who will not think less of the President because, without sacrificing any of his personal convictions, he has been able to bring the great political party of which he is the leader to the support of the essential principles for which he stands.

My friend from Maryland leaves the impression that the President has exhibited instability of character and qualities of leadership at once variable and eccentric, and, with a good humor which no one here feels disposed to resent, has sought to bring into ridicule one who occupies the highest civic eminence of the Republic. The only answer that I feel inclined to make to that now is, that, whatever may be said for or against the President, whatever may be the misunderstandings and the petty controversies and differences that have arisen, there are some things about this situation which will have a place in the record of our times, after all these noises have passed into oblivion. The President is not an agitator. He is a conservative thinker on the largest questions which concern modern society, and, even more important, he is a master of the art of achievement.

I say here that the President of the United States comes out of this fight with every substantive proposition connected with this matter, which he recommended in his messages to Congress, written in plain terms, if this bill becomes a law, in the statute book of the United States. What did the President desire us to do? In his message to Congress, delivered last December, he said:

> In my judgment the most important provision which such law should contain is that conferring upon some competent administrative body the power to decide, upon the case being brought before it, whether a given rate prescribed by a railroad is reasonable and just, and if it is found to be unreasonable and unjust, then, after full investigation of the complaint, to prescribe the limit of rate beyond which it shall not be lawful to go—the maximum reasonable rate, as it is commonly called—this decision to go into effect within a reasonable time and to obtain from thence onward, subject to review by the courts.

As if to anticipate the numerous amendments which, from one quarter and another, have sought admission into this measure, the President added these words of caution:

> I call your attention to the fact that my proposal is not to give the Commission power to initiate or originate rates generally, but to regulate a rate already fixed or originated by the roads, upon complaint and after investigation. A heavy penalty should be exacted from any corporation which fails to respect an order of the Commission. I regard this power to establish a maximum rate as being essential to any scheme of real reform in the matter of railway regulation. The first necessity is to secure it; and unless it is granted to the Commission there is little use in touching the subject at all.

Will any man rise in this Chamber and say that this bill is not a full response to that recommendation of the President? What else did the President ask Congress to do? In the same message he said:

All private car lines, industrial roads, refrigerator charges, and the like should be expressly put under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission or some similar body so far as rates, and agreements practically affecting rates, are concerned. The private car owners and the owners of industrial railroads are entitled to a fair and reasonable compensation on their investment, but neither private cars nor industrial railroads nor spur tracks should be utilized as devices for securing preferential rates.

It is agreed on all hands that a provision effective in character to correct these abuses finds its place in the first section of the bill which we are now about to enact.

What else did the President ask Congress to do? He said:

There should be publicity of the accounts of common carriers; no common carrier engaged in interstate business should keep any books or memoranda other than those reported pursuant to law or regulation, and these books or memoranda should be open to the inspection of the Government.

Will any man deny that the bill which we are about to pass responds in a practical way to that recommendation? So, Mr. President, I say that the far-reaching reforms which have been suggested to Congress in the messages of the President have found their way into this bill and will soon find their way into the statute book of the United States. I rejoice they will go into the law by the substantially unanimous vote of both sides of his Chamber, for while the Republican side has, by the exigency of circumstances which it can do no good to discuss, been brought together in a real unity of purpose, we have not found it necessary to despise the counsel of the other side of this Chamber. The wise suggestion made by the honorable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] is preserved in this proposed statute. The amendment suggested by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is a valuable part of this bill, and the very useful proposal of the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has added additional value to this legislation.

This bill is the product of the thought and of the earnest consideration of many minds without regard to those differences of party politics that ought not to intrude into it. It has in it, and in the amendments which have been added to it, that serviceable wisdom which comes from a multitude of counselors.

I think we ought to honor the President of the United States. For years the petitions asking for this legislation have been pending here; and the people owe it to him that they took life and vigor from his unreserved indorsement. He has been our leader through all the difficult and complex disputes which have arisen out of the problems with which we have been dealing. Whatever may be said of him here or elsewhere, one thing is absolutely certain, that long after the bitterness and acrimony of these closing days of the debate are forgotten, Theodore Roosevelt will be remembered with grateful hearts by the American people, because in the midst of the cares of his great office, with no thought of his own comfort or convenience, unmoved by the persuasion of friends or the malice of enemies, he took up in behalf of his countrymen what seemed to be a hopeless fight and carried it to a victory without precedent in our entire legislative history.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I know the Senate is impatient to get to a vote, but there are a few words I desire to say in regard to this bill and my connection with it, and I mean to say them now. I have not occupied much of the time of the Senate in this debate, and I have not offered many amendments. Of the two or three hundred amendments that have been offered here, I have offered but one, which was successful to-day in being adopted. What I now propose to say is not for the benefit of the Senate, but I desire to say a few things for the benefit of the outside world, for the benefit of the American people.

Almost twenty years ago, under the leadership of the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], I assisted in a modest way in securing the passage of the law now on the statute book.

Mr. SPOONER. There are only eleven Senators left who assisted in securing the passage of that act.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Wisconsin says there are only eleven of us left now present who assisted in that enterprise. The Senator from Illinois did me the honor, before he offered that bill, to consult me about it. I gave him the best advice I could and also gave him my loyal support from the time he offered the bill. It became a law; and, considering that it was the first law of the kind, I think it was a remarkable exhibition of good common sense, although it did not accomplish all that we had hoped it would. For the last fifteen years, perhaps, there has been more or less of a demand for additional legislation on this subject to cure some of the evils that are found in the existing law. That demand met with a general response from the political party with which I am affiliated, for in at least two national conventions they declared in favor of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. In three.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from South Carolina says in three national conventions.

Mr. President, I gave my support to that principle. The political party now in power declared for it in some State conventions, but never in a national convention. I am not saying this because I want to give a partisan color to the matter. I deprecate that. I am saying it in defense of the charges that have been made outside, and somewhat insinuated even in this debate, that on this side we were not loyal to the demands that we had made in our own platform.

When the Supreme Court of the United States declared officially that the Interstate Commerce Commission had not the power to make a rate, there was a general demand that that power should be given to them. That was several years ago. Nothing was done in the way of legislation toward that end until the President of the United States, a year ago last December, in his message, called the attention of the Congress to the necessity of giving the Commission power to fix rates. At that session of Congress a bill came here, but it came near the closing hours of a session which was about expiring by constitutional limitation.

The Committee on Interstate Commerce took up that question and, by its chairman, declared on the floor of the Senate that there was not time to properly consider the bill before them, and therefore the bill went over. I will venture to say that if that bill was before the Senate to-day, it could not get one vote of the Senate in its support.

The Committee on Interstate Commerce spent several weeks in taking the testimony of a great many carriers, taking the testimony of shippers, taking the testimony of lawyers, and taking the testimony of men who had built and operated railroads in this country. I received at my home the printed report of the proceedings of that committee every day, and every word of it I read from the beginning to the close. In reading it I discovered what I had always believed, that this is a question requiring the most careful deliberation of Congress. How it should be accomplished was a question upon which the friends of the measure might properly disagree. I think I derived more information and saw better into this case and the difficulties of it by reading the testimony of the president of one of the great northwestern railroads than from any other source.

Last December, in his message, the President again gave us his advice on this subject, as he properly might. The House of Representatives sent us a bill; but they will hardly recognize it, Mr. President, when it gets back. I do not believe, outside of a few Senators, that there was any sentiment in the Senate for the passage of that bill without amendment.

While I think now the bill is not such a bill as we ought to pass, not such a bill as the people demand, and one not dealing with all the evils of transportation, yet, in my judgment, it is an infinitely better bill than it was when it came from the House. No sooner had the bill reached this body than there came a clamor for haste. It was asked: "Why not take it up and pass it?" We were told in the public press that undoubtedly the Senate would mutilate the bill, and almost daily criticisms on us were heard in the other House.

Mr. President, there has not been before the Congress in the last fifty years a question of more importance to the American people than the question which we are now about to act upon. Involving, as it does, a transportation and a commerce that no other country in the world can compare with, touching interests involving many billion dollars, and touching the interests of every shipper and every producer, we were justified in sitting down here and considering this bill as the Senate ought to consider every bill of importance and as the fathers of the Constitution intended that the Senate should do. It is to be passed by the Senate on the judgment of this body and not on the judgment of the other House or on the judgment of the Executive. The legislative branch of the Government, Mr. President, is responsible for the acts of Congress. It is true the President may sign the bill or he may refuse to do so; but, after all, it is Congress that the people hold responsible either for a failure to pass laws or the mistakes made in the character of the laws that are passed.

Much has been said about the constitutional lawyers here, as if this were not the place of all others where there should be constitutional lawyers, as if it were a blight upon the character of a member of this body that he should assume to stand for the Constitution of the United States. Effective legislation on this subject must be brought within the Constitution of the United States. We have heard from more than one lawyer here—and every man here must admit it—that it is not yet a settled question what our power may be. We know that we can not ourselves sit down and fix railroad rates. We may have the power, but we have not the ability to make rates and apply them to all the railroads of the country. The question whether we can leave the determination of that matter to a commission is yet open. I do not intend to debate it. I only mean to say, Mr. President, that I intend to vote for this bill. I intended to vote for it from the hour that it came into the Senate. I believe I can say with truth that a great majority in this body from the day the bill reached here determined to support it, at least when it was put in proper form.

I am not saying what the Supreme Court of the United States will do with this bill when it is enacted; and no man, no matter what his legal training may be, dare say what that court will do, for it would be a mere guess. As the Senator from Texas said yesterday, we thought at one time that the question involved was practically settled, but we know now that at least the court has declared that they have not settled that proposition.

I am not satisfied with this bill. I believe some amendments should have been made to it which have not been made; but it is the best probably that we could do here. When we shall pass it and the President shall sign it, as he doubtless will, it will go into operation.

Mr. President, I am sorry that within the last few days there has been an attempt to give this question a partisan bias and direction. When this bill passed the House of Representatives it passed by almost a unanimous vote. Every Democrat in the House who voted, voted for it, and only seven Members out of the membership of that body voted against it. Every one of them was a Republican. Every one of them was a man of character and influence and position in the House of Representatives. This indicates that some men in the House doubted whether the House bill would stand the test of the courts. I do not believe that anywhere there is any considerable feeling against trying to regulate the rates on railroads in this country.

Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa tells us that the President is entitled to receive credit for this bill; that he has been a leader of the friends of the bill. I believe it to be the duty of the President of the United States to recommend to Congress such legislation as he thinks the country needs. That right is given him by the Constitution. I am one of those who believe that when he does that he ought to quit. If he thinks later that there is something that he has omitted or some new question arises, he has a right, and it is his duty probably, to submit the question again here. I for one deny the right of the President of the United States to dictate to me what I shall do, and I deny his right to call me to his office and instruct me or even request me to do this or that. If he wishes to communicate with me, he should communicate with every other Senator. He has no right to communicate to a few. He should give us all the benefit of his judgment.

If there are some things which have happened within a few days that may not be pleasant to everybody and which we must all more or less regret, they have happened because the President of the United States has interfered with that which does not belong to his office. I am going to give him the credit of controlling his political party for this bill. I am going to say that I do not believe a bill of this character would have passed the Senate, strongly Republican as it is, and with the support of the Democrats here, which would have been given it almost unanimously, if the President had not given life to this enterprise. I do not wish to detract one iota from the credit to which he is entitled for doing his constitutional duty when he sent his message to Congress concerning this bill. I do believe, however, that when the President of the United States has done that he should cease until he sees the occasion for sending another message; and I believe that if he had pursued that course the "unpleasant situation," as the senior Senator from Iowa called it the other day, would not have occurred.

Mr. President, this bill is defective in many particulars. We shall come back here at the next session of Congress and probably try to do those things we have omitted to do. I hope so. I hope this measure will pass the criticism of the Supreme Court.

I want to say one word about review. I think in the present condition the court has as absolute control of every question that could arise as it is possible to give it. With that I am finding no fault, for while I agree with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and other Senators who have spoken on this subject, it is doubtless in our power to restrict the jurisdiction of the court in these cases. Yet I myself do not feel, with these great interests at stake, with the beginning of a system heretofore unknown in this country, that it was wise for us to attempt to restrict the court in its consideration of the case when the carrier or the shipper should carry it there for final determination. I have an abiding faith in the courts. I do not mean by that that they are infallible. I do not mean that I have not criticised them or that I shall not criticise them in the future. I do not mean that they do not render opinions which lawyers all over the country challenge. Judges are only men. But after all the court is the last resort. It is the place where every man goes who claims that he has been wronged. It is the place that must always be kept open for those who think injustice has been done to them either by the Government or by their fellow-men. Hence I was willing to leave the court to pass upon and to hear every complaint that the carrier could make and to determine whether we had been within the law, whether we had done justice or not, so that we might be in condition hereafter to rectify and right any mistakes that we may have made.

Therefore I voted for the Allison amendment. I voted for it with some pleasure, because it contained, in addition to the provision which gave to the carrier his full opportunity, another provision for which I had contended, and that was that the finding of the Commission should be final and complete and should remain in force until such time as the court determined the right and justness of the whole case. In other words, I was in favor of it because it recognized the principle of the Bailey amendment, which provided that there should be no interlocutory injunction issued. I was glad to vote for it because it established our right here, so far as precedent goes, to say what should be the jurisdiction of the court and when the court should interfere to set aside the findings of the Commission. No lawyer can vote for the Allison amendment and then deny the right of Congress to say to the court, "You shall not issue interlocutory injunctions for the next thirty days." If you can say five days, you can say thirty days; and if you can say thirty days, you can say ninety days. That provides that there shall be a hearing; that evidence shall be produced.

If you can say that the interlocutory injunction shall not issue until there has been some hearing, you can say that it shall not issue until there has been a final hearing. By a vote almost unanimous we declared that the power to control the injunction existed in Congress. We may find it necessary later, that to enforce the proposition laid down in the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas, and at least those of us who voted for the Allison amendment, will be in morals if not in law estopped from saying that that power does not exist.

Mr. President, I congratulate the Senate that we have practically got through with this bill. I congratulate the country that we have taken hold of this great question, and while I admit the bill is not perfect, I do not believe that the people of the United States expect of us a perfect law in the first effort. It is but little better than the law we passed here nearly twenty years ago under the direction of the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. It has omitted, I want to say again, many things that ought to have been in it, unless it be the policy of the act to confine the whole thing to the rate-making power; and we have shown by the amendments we have made that that was not the policy upon which we proceeded in the consideration and treatment of this bill. Having attempted more than that, we ought to have accomplished more. But I congratulate the country that we have made a step in this direction, and if the court shall hold, as I hope it may—I repeat I am not overconfident—that we have not violated any of the constitutional provisions, it will be a great step toward controlling and regulating, without injury, in my judgment, to the great transportation interests that ought to be our care just as much as that of the interests of the shippers, the question of interstate commerce in this country.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I wish to detain the Senate for only a very few sentences. I do not propose to go into any discussion of the merits of this measure. I want only to say about it that if I could vote upon it section by section I would be relieved from a great deal of embarrassment that I now experience, for there are in this bill, put there by the Senate amendment, a number of provisions that I desire most heartily to support and against which I do not like to vote.

I remain of the opinion I entertained with respect to this legislation from the very beginning of this controversy. My objection is to the Government going into the rate-making business at all, and particularly in the manner in which it is provided it shall go into it in this measure. I believe this bill in that particular to be unconstitutional, and I believe that the measure if upheld in the courts will in that respect prove a disappointment to the people who have asked this kind of legislation at the hands of Congress. I am not able to get the consent of my mind to vote for a measure that involves such consequences.

I take some comfort in the fact that while I may be alone in my vote, I am not alone in the opinions that are entertained by Senators on this point. Nearly every Senator who has spoken here to-day has expressed himself as disappointed to a greater or less degree in this legislation. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] who has just taken his seat, one of the soundest in judgment, one of the most conservative legislators I have known in this association, has told us that the bill lacks in many respects what he thinks it should contain, and that he has, with respect to its fate in the court, the gravest doubt and apprehension. And in that form from one after another who has spoken, we have heard practically the same statement.

Mr. President, I may be wrong about it all; I, perhaps, have been; it seems to me I get on the wrong side of everything here of late; but there is one thing about it; I have been in keeping and in accord with my own judgment and convictions all the while. Mr. President, I have not opposed this measure because I did not believe there ought to be legislation. I think every Senator in this body knows that every time I have spoken I have insisted that there were practices and abuses and wrongs that ought to be legislated against. But I have been unable to agree that this is either a constitutional way or that it is the best and most efficient way to accomplish that end. I labored to formulate a plan, and I labored hard to induce others to see and understand my proposition as I saw and understood it. In that I have failed.

I might now waive my own preference about it, I suppose, and say that out of deference to the judgment of my colleagues I will sacrifice my own convictions and vote with them. If I could see that there was any necessity for that I would, perhaps, be willing to do it. But as it has been said here, this measure will pass; it will pass by a unanimous vote, I suppose, except one; there will be one vote against it. I do not see how it would do any good to anybody, unless it would be to myself, to vote contrary to my own convictions as to what this legislation shall be. Inasmuch as it can not do any good to the country, and can not do any good to my party, or the interests that are to be legislated about, I prefer to carry away with me out of this controversy and contest the knowledge and the belief and the satisfaction that come to me from having the knowledge and the belief that I have acted as I have spoken and voted as I have spoken, in accordance with my own judgment and my own convictions.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I will not occupy the floor more than a minute or two, and I do not rise to detain this bill.

While I am on the floor I will say one or two words in reference to what was said by the Senator from Iowa. The Senator claims the credit of this measure for the President of the United States and the Republican party. That was done either by the surrender of the President to the opponents of railroad rate regulation or the surrender of the opponents of rate regulation to the President. The President himself says that in the beginning he was opposed to a broad court review; that he was in favor of a limited court review. There has been adopted, and, if the Senator from Iowa correctly represents the situation, through the leadership of the President, a bill that has the broadest possible court review.

Time and again the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] put the question to the Republican Senators to know if there was any word in the English language that would broaden or widen the scope of the review committed to the courts by the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and adopted by the Senate. Not a Senator could be found on the Republican side who could suggest one word or any number of words that would broaden the review given by that amendment. So while the President has united his party in the Senate, I doubt if he has united his party in the country. He has united his party in the Senate by surrendering rights and demands of the shippers of the country, and when I say of the shippers, I mean all those rights and demands which are incidental to the rights and demands of the shippers of the country, because, as I said a day or two ago, every individual or nearly every individual in the country is affected by the shipper's bill.

Mr. President, as I stated, I did not rise to discuss this measure, but I could not resist the temptation to say this much. Several days ago I introduced this amendment:

> That no free interstate pass shall be issued by any interstate common carrier of passengers to any officer of the United States, including executive, legislative, and judicial officers.

That proposed amendment was challenged by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] as not taking within its scope United States Senators and Representatives. I had never thought that there was any question about their being United States officers. If the term "legislative officers of the United States" did not include Representatives and Senators, I was at a loss to understand what it would mean. I would refer to the trial of the impeachment case of Blount in 1799. My attention has been called by the Senator from Georgia to this part of the plea of Senator Blount:

> That proceedings by impeachment are provided and permitted by the Constitution of the United States only on charges of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors alleged to have been committed by the President, Vice-President, or any civil officer of the United States in the execution of their offices held under the United States, as appears by the fourth section of the second article and the seventh clause of the third section of the first article and other articles and clauses contained in the Constitution of the United States. That although true it is that he, the said William Blount, was a Senator of the United States from the State of Tennessee at the several periods in the said articles of impeachment referred to, yet that he, the said William Blount, is not now a Senator, and is not, nor was at the several periods so as aforesaid referred to, a civil officer of the United States, nor is he, the said William Blount, in and by the said articles charged with having committed any crime or misdemeanor in the execution of any civil office held under the United States, nor with any malconduct in a civil office or abuse of any public trust in the execution thereof.

To that there was practically a demurrer by the Representatives prosecuting the articles of impeachment in which the impeached joined issue, and on that this motion was offered by the prosecution:

> That William Blount was a civil officer of the United States, within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, and therefore liable to be impeached by the House of Representatives.
> That as the articles of impeachment charge him with high crimes and misdemeanors, supposed to have been committed while he was a Senator of the United States, his plea ought to be overruled.

That was defeated by a vote of 11 to 14. Then this motion was made:

> The court is of opinion that the matter alleged in the plea of the defendant is sufficient in law to show that this court ought not to hold jurisdiction of the said impeachment, and that the said impeachment be dismissed.

That motion was sustained by a vote of 14 to 11.

I will pass that by, simply saying there is nothing in this to show whether the Senators refused to convict because they held that the impeached was not a civil officer of the United States, or whether it was held that he was not impeachable because he was not at the time of the impeachment an officer of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi allow me?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator will read the Annals of the Fifth Congress of the United States, the session of Congress at which the impeachment took place, he will there find the full statement and the full proceedings. The Senator will find that the vote was taken directly, and the arguments of the counsel were directed directly to the proposition as to whether a Senator is a civil officer of the United States or an officer of the State.

Mr. McLAURIN. Now, that is the motion that I have read. The motion I have read shows the question that was presented to the Senate, and different Senators might have had a different view of it.

In the case Ex parte Siebold, in 100 United States Reports, at page 393, this language is used:

> In what we have said it must be remembered that we are dealing only with the subject of elections of Representatives to Congress. If, for its own convenience, a State sees fit to elect State and county officers at the same time and in conjunction with the election of Representatives, Congress will not be thereby deprived of the right to make regulations in reference to the latter.

Distinguishing as clearly as language can make it between State officers and Representatives and Senators of the United States.

In Ex parte Clarke there was delivered a dissenting opinion to the majority opinion of the court. Both the Siebold case and Ex parte Clarke are in the same volume of the report (100 Reports), and the other that I read is on page 393. In that dissenting opinion, delivered by Judge Field, on page 412, he said:

> The same thing is true in all cases where the agency of State officers is used; and this doctrine applies with special force to judges of elections at which numerous State officers are chosen at the same time with Representatives to Congress. So far as the election of State officers and the registration of voters for their election are concerned, the Federal Government has confessedly no authority to interfere.

In that case, on page 419, in the same dissenting opinion, Judge Field said:

> The views expressed derive further support from the fact that the constitutional provision applies equally to the election of Senators, except as to the place of choosing them, as it does to the election of Representatives.

Recognizing, therefore, both in the dissenting opinion and in the opinion in chief, that State officers are distinguished from United States Senators and Representatives in Congress.

In the case of Ex parte Yarbrough, in the one hundred and tenth volume, at page 162, Judge Miller used this language, speaking for a unanimous court:

> If this be so, and it is not doubted, are such powers annulled because an election for State officers is held at the same time and place? Is it any less important that the election of Members of Congress should be the free choice of all the electors because State officers are to be elected at the same time?

Then he refers to Ex parte Siebold for authority.

I wanted to put this in the RECORD, Mr. President. I had never heard the points questioned. I asked at the time for a reference to authorities holding that Senators and Representatives in Congress are not legislative officers of the United States, because that is the language of the amendment. No authority has been furnished. I have had in the busy hours of the closing days of the consideration of this long and tedious and tumultuous rate bill but little time to look into this matter, but stepping into the Library one day I found these two opinions, which clearly distinguish State officers from Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States. So I think it is perfectly clear that Representatives and Senators are legislative officers of the United States, as held by the Supreme Court of the United States, they not being State officers.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, before I record my vote on this bill I desire to enter both a denial and a protest.

I deny that this bill complies with the recommendations of the President. I protest against every attempt to make it a partisan measure.

The President, in his message in 1901, urged upon Congress the amendment of the interstate-commerce act, declaring in that message that the people of this country were entitled to "just rates." In 1904 he recommended such legislation as would insure "reasonable rates." In 1905 he recommended such legislation as would insure "maximum reasonable rates."

This bill does not comply with any of the recommendations of the President. It will not enable the public to obtain the "just rates" recommended in 1901 or the reasonable rates recommended in 1904. It does not contain provisions that will enable the Commission even to ascertain the "reasonable maximum rates" recommended in 1905.

I desire, sir, to protest against making this a political or partisan question. This has been attempted since this measure has been under consideration. The Senate may give it that appearance, but it can not be made a partisan issue before the country. This Senate, under the lead of certain Republican Senators, may seek to draw party lines, but they will fail when they carry the question back to the people in the States. You can not divide the people of this country on political lines upon a question as to whether the public-service corporations of the country shall serve the people of the country fairly, equitably, reasonably, justly.

I offered several amendments to this bill. I offered no amendment upon which any political question ought to have been raised or any party vote cast. Every amendment which I offered would have strengthened its provisions and made it more just to the shippers, the consumers, and yet not one of those amendments was unfair to the carriers of this country.

I proposed the following amendments to this bill:

1. To restore the penalty of imprisonment for violations of the interstate-commerce law.

This amendment was defeated by a vote of 49 noes to 27 ayes. Forty-seven of the negative votes being those of Republican and two of Democratic Senators; of the votes for the amendment, twenty-six of the Senators voting were Democrats.

2. To strike out the two-year limitation, by the terms of which orders of the Commission expire two years from the time when such orders go into effect.

This amendment was rejected without a roll call, the votes in opposition thereto coming from Republican Senators.

3. To provide that when testimony is offered upon trial different from the testimony upon which the order of the Commission is based, testimony shall be taken by the trial court, the action suspended for fifteen days, the evidence certified back to the Commission, and the Commission given an opportunity to modify or revoke its former order.

This amendment was defeated—ayes 26, noes 49. Twenty-five Democratic Senators voted for the amendment; forty-eight Republican Senators voted against the amendment.

4. Substitute to section 15 providing for—

(a) Authority for the Commission to issue orders upon its own motion.

(b) To fix a maximum rate.

(c) To fix a differential, and to prescribe both a maximum and a minimum rate.

(d) To change the classification of any article.

(e) To determine what regulation or practice in respect to transportation is just and reasonable.

All Republican Senators who voted, excepting myself, voting against the amendment.

5. To forbid every Federal judge who owns shares of stock or bonds of a common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or who uses a free pass or procures for the use of others free passes over such railroads, from hearing or deciding any proceeding or presiding at any trial under the provisions of this act.

Laid upon the table by a vote of 40 to 27—forty Republican Senators voting in the affirmative, twenty-five Democratic Senators voting in the negative.

6. That upon the trial of any action brought to set aside or modify any order made by the Commission a copy of the evidence introduced by the plaintiff shall, upon motion made on behalf of the Commission, be transmitted to the Commission, and the court shall stay further proceedings in such action for fifteen days from the date of such transmission that the Commission upon receipt of such evidence may alter, modify, or amend the same. The amended order shall take the place of the original order, as though made by the Commission in the first instance.

The amendment was laid upon the table without debate—ayes 41, noes 30. Forty Republican Senators voted to lay the motion on the table. All Senators voting in the negative were Democrats excepting four.

7. That the Commission shall estimate and ascertain the fair value of the property of every railroad engaged in interstate commerce, as defined in this act, and used by it for the convenience of the public.

Motion to lay on the table rejected by a viva voce vote. Motion later renewed, and amendment laid on the table—ayes 40, noes 27. Thirty-nine Republican Senators voted to lay the amendment on the table. All votes against laying the amendment on the table were recorded by Democratic Senators excepting six.

8. To adopt the block system, insuring greater safety to the traveling public. Amendment rejected without roll call. All votes against the amendment coming from the Republican side of the Chamber.

9. For the railway employers' liability amendment for the relief of railway employees.

Defeated—ayes 28, noes 45. Those who voted in the affirmative were all Democrats excepting four. Of those voting against the amendment all were Republicans excepting three.

There can not be offered here or before the country any satisfactory argument or reason against the amendments which I proposed. No arguments have been made or reasons offered against their adoption. My Republican colleagues, under the leadership of a few New England Senators, lined up to vote down those amendments in nearly every instance without explanation or justification.

This bill, when it becomes a law, will not put this question at rest. It can not. When Congress merely clothes the Commission with power to ascertain whether rates are relatively equal and withholds from it all authority and all means of determining whether those rates are just and reasonable, it can not be expected that such inadequate legislation will solve this great problem and satisfy the public demand for not only equal but also just and reasonable rates.

The question which this bill should settle, but does not settle, will be a live issue in the next campaign for the election of men to both branches of Congress who will stand for a full measure of relief from oppressive transportation abuses.

So long as the legislation relative to the common carriers of this country permits these corporations to increase their capital stock without limit, increase it without adding anything of value to their properties, and increase it solely with the purpose of fixing rates upon that inflated capitalization, in order to pay profits and dividends to those holding the stocks and bonds, in which they have no real investment, just so long this question will be a vital issue before the American people.

There is to-day in the stock and bond valuation of the railroads of this country upward of seven billions of water. If the American people are expected to continue to pay transportation charges that will make a return upon that valuation, the temper of the people of this country is not understood here. Until there is invested in this Commission or some other authoritative body the power to determine the real, true valuation of the railroads of this country and the authority to fix rates so that they shall bear only a fair return upon that fair value, Senators may as well understand now that you will have this question constantly before you. It will not be possible to suppress it or keep it within the closed doors of committees for nine years to come. At every session, until an adequate measure is adopted, while I remain a member of this body the demand will be made here for legislation that will insure to the people of every State fair treatment at the hands of the common carriers of the country.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I will be one of a few Senators on this floor, I think, who will cast his vote against this bill. If I had no other reason for casting it, perhaps I might find a sufficient justification in the criticisms that have been pronounced upon it by those gentlemen who say they intend to vote for it. On a great question of this kind, involving the interests of every person in the United States, a bill can hardly approve itself to the public judgment whose friends, when they announce their support of it, denounce it as being the worst bill they ever had to deal with.

I am not concerned about the public sentiment of the people of the United States on this bill as some of the gentlemen are who have recently addressed the Senate upon that subject. The people of my State are not concerned in that. All they want under the Constitution and laws of the United States are the rights which are guaranteed to them plainly and firmly in that organic law. They claim nothing else. While I am a member of this body they will not fail to get their constitutional rights through my delinquence or through my fear of political consequences.

The people of Alabama on a very recent occasion have adopted a constitution which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] referred to in the early part of the session, and he had a document printed here in which the constitution and the statutes of Alabama were embraced. The Senator from Pennsylvania was evidently very much impressed with the soundness of the doctrines and of the propriety of the provisions of law that are ordained in the constitution of Alabama and have been enacted by its legislature; otherwise he would not have introduced those papers to the Senate of the United States with his approval.

They provide a system, Mr. President, that is perfectly just and right and in accord with the experience of the American people since the first railroad was ever chartered in the United States, an experience under which we have lived and under which we have prospered, perhaps I might properly say, as no nation on the earth has prospered in any other time or under any other circumstances. The railroad system chartered by the States, sustained by the States by grant of land and money, and sustained by the generations that have passed away now, by subscriptions of stock that have been paid into their treasuries—railroads thus chartered and thus supported by the States and the people of the States have been the prime factors in this wonderful progress in our prosperity.

During that period of time some of the roads have been combined together in such a way by the covetousness of great capitalists as that their operations have been a serious injustice to the people of the United States at large. But notwithstanding that infirmity, which is easy enough to correct if we chose to correct it, they have been not only the principal factors in our rapid and great progress, but they are to-day the most influential of any other class of men in the United States.

These railroad corporations have drawn into their service more talent than the American Government has been able to draw to its service in the same length of time in the Congress of the United States—more skill, more ability, and as much of the elements of honorable success. So in launching a measure against the railroads of this country we ought to be considerate of their rights as well as of the rights of the people. Some recent events have so impressed me with their value in benefaction and in kindness and in charity to our people that I do not feel quite justified in rising on the floor of the Senate and opposing them indiscriminately. I can not get my conscience down to that point of such rebellion against the truth.

The State of Alabama, Mr. President, has instructed me in her constitution as to the principles upon which I shall deal with railroad corporations, and in opposing this bill I follow that constitution and I follow the legislation of my State as nearly as practicable. I do not feel at liberty to contradict all of the principles of that constitution and of that legislation and to throw my individual opinion, under any pressure whatever, whether it is Presidential or whether it is political, in the scale against the rights, interests, and the solemn annunciation of our people in convention assembled.

I therefore follow their lead. I tried to reenact the principles upon which they have predicated all their dealings with railroads, believing them to be perfectly just, and believing also that they will lead to the very best of conclusions.

Our people in the South have received very great advantage from these railroads, but we are more independent of them than any other people in the United States in moving our great crops in the South, our cotton and pine timber, our coal, iron, and cement, for we have navigable streams that lead from the pine forests and the cotton fields and the coal and iron mines and the cement beds out into the southern Atlantic and into the Gulf of Mexico, that very readily supply us with all the transportation that is needed for the purpose of getting our crops and productions to market. We are not in a hurry to realize upon our crops, because we can cash our crops wherever presented on the face of the earth. If you get a little village or a farm 50 miles away from the railroad you can sell cotton at the full market price right at the door without reference to transportation. So through the beneficence of Providence in giving us these monopolistic advantages, and also in the transportation of our products to market, we are placed in a condition where we are not necessarily dependent upon the forbearance or the good treatment of the railroad companies. They come to us eagerly seeking our patronage.

I do not urge that as a plea for any vote that I give here, because I would fly to the rescue of any community in the United States, no matter where it may be, that is really oppressed through the agency of the combinations who control very long and very large and very wealthy lines of railroad.

Following that principle, Mr. President, I have sought to make only two amendments of any importance to this bill. They both relate to the constitutional rights of the people, not of Alabama alone, but of the entire Union. I had the mortification to see that the committee of the House and the House in its vote on the Hepburn bill had torn out of the existing law those sections which quoted the Constitution of the United States in respect of trial by jury—kicked them out of doors—and the Senate has refused to pay respect to them. One section related to the right of trial by jury on questions that arise in controversies like those that will arise under this act. They also related to the restriction by constitutional ordination of a power that has grown to be a very dangerous power in England particularly. That was the power of the chancellors to take the jurisdiction of subjects of this kind into their own keeping and to prevent jury trials.

Our fathers saw that it was necessary to put the seventh amendment in the Constitution in order to preserve these rights, the right of trial by jury in cases at common law where the sum involved was $20 or more and where the right of action was plain, adequate, and complete at law. In doing that they put in a constitutional provision, as they hoped, as an everlasting barrier against the aggressions of the chancellors, that had resulted in depriving the people of the right of trial by jury, especially in cases involving claims for damages, and in actions against public servants, such as innkeepers and common carriers, who charge rates that are unreasonable and unjust.

Our people settled it in their Constitution that those rights should never be invaded or neglected in the United States.

But these rights that are still in the existing law are swept away bodily by this bill with contemptuous insolence.

I offered an amendment to this bill to restore that section of the law as it stands to-day, in order that the people might have the protection of that constitutional guaranty which was explicitly put into what is called the "Cullom Act." I could never understand why it was necessary or thought to be proper in any sense at all to strike that provision of the Constitution out of the existing law of the United States and throw it aside. So I essayed the vain attempt of trying to reinstate it. I was voted down. I will insert, without reading now, Mr. President, the amendment to which my remarks relate in reference to the trial by jury and in reference to the power of chancellors. I have not the strength nor do I wish to detain the Senate by reading anything unless I am compelled to do so. I therefore ask leave to insert that amendment in my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Leave will be granted in the absence of objection.

The amendment referred to is as follows:

SEC. —. That if the matters involved in any order or requirement of said Commission are founded upon a controversy requiring a trial by jury, as provided by the seventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and any such common carrier shall violate or refuse or neglect to obey or perform the same, after notice given by said Commission as provided in the fifteenth section of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as the same is amended by act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, it shall be lawful for any company or person interested in such order or requirement to apply in a summary way by petition to the circuit court of the United States sitting as a court of law in the judicial district in which the carrier complained of has its principal office, or in which the violation or disobedience of such order or requirement shall happen, alleging such violation or disobedience, as the case may be; and said court shall by its order fix a time and place for the trial of said cause, which shall not be less than twenty nor more than forty days from the time said order is made; and it shall be the duty of the marshal of the district in which said proceeding is pending to forthwith serve a copy of said petition and of said order upon each of the defendants, and it shall be the duty of the defendants to file their answers to said petition within ten days after the service of the same as aforesaid. At the trial the findings of fact of said Commission, as set forth in its report, shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated, and if either party shall demand a jury or shall omit to waive a jury the court shall, by its order, direct the marshal forthwith to summon a jury to try the cause; but if all the parties shall waive a jury in writing then the court shall try the issues in said cause and render its judgment thereon. Either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States under the same regulations now provided by law in respect to security for such appeal and without regard to the value of the subject in dispute; but such appeal must be taken within twenty days from the day of the rendition of the judgment of said circuit court. If the judgment of the circuit court shall be in favor of the party complaining, he or they shall be entitled to recover a reasonable counsel or attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court, which shall be collected as part of the costs in the case. For the purposes of this act, excepting its penal provisions, the circuit courts of the United States shall be deemed to be always in session.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, when that amendment was voted down I saw at once that it was the purpose of the Senate to exclude jury trials in all cases arising under this act, and that the people whom this bill professes to try to assist were to be shut out with contemptuous disdain from any participation whatever in the trial of any issue that will arise or can arise under this bill. No jury is to be summoned upon it. In order that I might get the matter into a perfectly clear shape, I offered another amendment, a very brief one, which I will read. At the end of section 7, I proposed to insert the following:

That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as depriving any person who sues in his own right and name from instituting any suit under its provisions, or any other suit, at law or in equity, in any State court, or in any court of the United States, against any common carrier.

That was voted down upon a call of the yeas and nays. I am very gratified indeed to find that all my Democratic friends who were in the Chamber voted for that amendment, and I am dismayed and disconcerted and disappointed to find that every Republican who voted on that amendment voted against it. What is meant by it? It is meant that the people, for whose benefit this bill is ostensibly being passed through the Senate to-day, are absolutely shut out not only from having jury trials, as I have demonstrated in my reference to the other amendment, but that they are shut out from the right of action in any court of a State or of the United States in respect of any matter which arises under this bill. Why do you want to exclude the people, that you pretend to be attempting to benefit, from the right to bring suits in their own right and in their own name against railroad corporations for the redress of their grievances and for the redress of their wrongs? I am glad that no Democrat voted against that amendment.

I thought, Mr. President, when I had presented these two amendments and they had been voted down that I had done my whole duty to my own people and to the people of the country who, in part, of course, I am here to represent. And I saw that they had gone down with me in the avalanche of absolutism, in which overzealous Democrats are assisting to launch upon the country. Having performed that duty, I shall never have a more serious or more pleasing duty devolved upon me than to vote against the pending bill.

I have another hope about it. The governor of Alabama is one of the forty-five governors in the United States who have the right of access to the Supreme Court of the United States in the exercise of its original jurisdiction. No American who is not a governor of a State has the right of access to that court to call upon it to exercise its untrammeled and unlimited jurisdiction in the trial of all causes whatsoever that may wrongfully affect him or his people. He can even go into that court, as did the governor of Virginia, and file a suit against citizens of his own State who are transgressing the law to the injury of other citizens. I think as many as seven or eight times that great court, in the hearing of causes instituted in the names of the governors and on behalf of the States or the people they represented, have summoned juries into this Capitol to try these causes. They do not disdain jury trial. Although the Senate of the United States kicks it out of doors, the Supreme Court does not disdain it.

The governor of Alabama, Mr. President, if he finds that any part of this measure which you are about to enact is injurious to the people of my State, can go into the Supreme Court and file his petition, his application, his bill in equity, his suit at law, setting forth his ground of complaint; and then it is with that court to determine whether it will entertain jurisdiction. They surely will do it if this law or the law of any other State operates to the injury of the people of Alabama in respect of their common general public business or their individual rights.

The governor of Alabama can go into the Supreme Court of the United States as a suitor. When he gets there he presents his case, his remonstrance, his complaint. The court will ask him: "Why do you present it in this form? Why do you present it in the form of an action at law?" "Well, because I want a trial by jury." "But we do not think a trial by jury probably is necessary in a case of this kind; we will not dismiss your proceeding, but will order you to file a bill on the equity side of this court, and make an equity cause of it for the convenience of witnesses, and in order to enable the court to determine certain matters of intricacy, certain matters which would belong, if they were in a suit in an inferior court, properly to the equity docket there. File your bill in equity here. Who are you going to make defendants?" "Why, a corporation in New York acting under the laws of New York, or acting under an act of Congress"—this act, if you please—"who are inflicting upon a corporation in my State or upon some citizens in my State or upon some community in my State injury and injustice which I present here in my statement of facts, which I certify to this court that I am able to prove." "You want process against a corporation in New York?" "Yes." "Well, but that is a corporation which professes to be acting under the laws of the State of New York." "Yes." "Then you want to make the State of New York a party?" "Certainly, along with the corporation. There are four or five great capitalists in the United States who are at the bottom of this transaction who have concocted and brought into operation this scheme which is injurious to the people of Alabama." "Do you want any measures taken against them?" "I do. I want to resort to this peculiar and apparently entirely novel doctrine of injunction"—which has been known at least a thousand years before it has been discussed so laboriously in the Senate here.

"I should like to have the benefit of an injunction or a writ of prohibition or a writ of mandamus against all or any of these parties against whom this court may proceed." "Take your summons and bring those people in here. Counsel for the defendants come up to the court and plead that Congress has made no provision for this proceeding; that Congress has not authorized the court to bring a State or a corporation or an individual from different parts of the United States as parties defendant in this proceeding." "Ah, but you forget Congress has no jurisdiction over this court to ordain or enact any form of proceeding whatsoever. Your motion is overruled. The court will proceed with the trial of this cause. Put in your answer, take the testimony, and the court will make any proper decision in regard to it in its legal aspect or in its equitable aspect respecting an individual or a community or a State or a corporation."

There is the tribunal, Mr. President, which is still open to us, thank God, of which the Senate of the United States and the Republican party can not close the door—it is still open to us. We will be in that tribunal, we will be there making a demand upon that court for a rectification of the wrongs, the injustices, and the evils of this bill. We know where to appeal; we know that the State of Alabama, represented by her governor, can go into that court of original jurisdiction and make a demand for a right that you can not resist.

How is that court going to enforce its decrees? you ask. The Virginia court asked that question on the first case that ever came before the court exercising its original jurisdiction. That was a case of the judgment of an inferior court, and the Supreme Court said, "We will send down our judgment and require them to enter it of record and execute it." The Virginia court said they would not do it; the Supreme Court said, "Well, we will take the judge or the governor or whoever it may be in Virginia who undertakes to withstand the decree of this court and we will order him up here for contempt of court." "How long are you going to punish him?" "Just as long as we think justice demands." "But the act of Congress puts a limitation upon the power of courts to punish for contempt." "Not upon this court; Congress can put no limitation upon the power of punishment or the power to execute the judgments of this court."

I do not care to follow the illustration any further than I have already done, because every lawyer here will understand it who has ever thought about the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States.

What I wish to do, Mr. President, is to express again my profound gratitude to the great and wise men of the United States who established that great tribunal, accessible to a State through its governor, who can demand of it redress for any grievance by a State or by a court of a State or by a corporation, or by anybody else—any grievance that has been inflicted upon the people of his State. I say I must again, as an American citizen, express my profound gratitude to the framers of the Constitution, who ordained this fourth department of the Government of the United States. We are in the habit of saying that this is a government of three departments, but there are four. There is one that, at the suit of a governor of a State, stands above them all, and can command the President of the United States to execute its process, and compel him to do it. He has got no power to resist it, although he is President.

That great department is still in possession of its plenary jurisdiction and powers, all derived from the Constitution, and when it comes to pass upon the constitutionality of what we are doing here to-day it will have no difficulty at all in solving that question according to its own honest convictions. When they come to enforce their orders they will have no difficulty, though they might be opposed by the President and the Army and the Navy of the United States. Why? Because every State in this Union will stand by that court and come to its support. It is the high court of state, discretion, and judgment. No man, no officer, no person in the United States dares to resist its decrees or orders, because it will draw to its support in the last resort the power of every State in the American Union.

Sir, I am not disconcerted about what is being done here to the injury and damage of the people of my State; and much is done in this bill from which the State of Alabama will suffer. You have given a power of differentiation between States and their seaports to this Commission. They can send the commerce of the United States from the great centers out through any seaport they see proper to do by discrimination under the permission of this law. You have given them the right to do it, and you can not take it back. The State of Alabama conceives that she is not to be wronged by that invidious power. She can go into the Supreme Court in its original jurisdiction and demand that the orders by which these differentials are made in favor of certain States and to the prejudice of others shall be annulled; and there can not be a doubt in the mind of any lawyer who has ever thought of the subject that they will be annulled.

So I am relying upon a power higher than the Congress of the United States or the President of the United States for the protection of the interests of the people of Alabama as they are declared in the Constitution, to which I have just referred, and to which my highest allegiance is due.

That is all, Mr. President, that I desire to say on this occasion.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, while this bill is not as good as it could have been made and is not as good as it ought to have been made, yet it is a distinct and great improvement over the existing law, and I shall very cheerfully cast my vote in favor of its passage.

As it came from the House of Representatives it was better than the existing law, and it will be still better as it passes the Senate. Indeed, sir, it may be sufficient to bring the common carriers of this country to render service to the public in a just and proper manner. If it shall fail, it is as certain that it will be amended as that it amends the law first passed some twenty years ago. If the carriers will hear me, I tell them now that if they do not respect and obey this milder statute, some Congress which comes after us will pass a law with teeth in it, and those teeth will be made of metal that will both endure and hurt.

One mistake we have made is that we did not incorporate in this bill a valuation provision. Mr. President, it is an absurdity to require the Commission to determine and prescribe a just and reasonable rate without providing that Commission with the means of first ascertaining the value of the property with which the service is performed. A valuation provision is an elementary; it is a primary; it is a fundamental step in the process of making rates, and the Senate committed a grave mistake when it voted that amendment down.

I think we also made a great mistake when we refused to adopt the amendment which would have kept the rate established by the Commission in force until the final determination of it by a court.

The third and last mistake which I think we have made is that we did not so narrow the jurisdiction of the court that when it finally came to decide the case it should have only the power to protect the constitutional property rights of the carrier.

But still, and with these deficiencies, this bill deserves to receive the vote of Congress, and then if it shall be fairly administered by those charged with the duty of administering it it will win a fair degree of approval among the people. If it is not fairly administered, or if the carriers whose greed it is intended to restrain begin to rack their brains to find new ways to evade it or defeat it, upon them must fall the consequences.

In conclusion, I desire to say that if this law proves insufficient—mark you, I do not say ineffective, because it is certain to produce some good effect—but if it proves insufficient, our successors who will assemble here twenty years after us, as we have assembled twenty years after those who enacted the first statute on this subject, will remedy the mistakes which we have made. They will write a valuation provision in this law, and if the courts have abused their power to restrain by preliminary injunction they will also write a prohibition against that in it. And if the courts, usurping the province of the Commission, shall go beyond, or shall go too far beyond, the protection of constitutional property rights, our successors will narrow this court review. Even then they will not have done their perfect work. They can only complete this law by writing out the maximum and writing in the absolute rate, and with that they will couple the power of the Commission to initiate a rate as well as to establish one upon complaint.

Mr. President, it is for the carriers to determine whether there shall be a new and a more drastic law. If they obey this one, they will be permitted to go without additional restraint; but if they defy and violate this law, they will be put under the subjection of another which will make their violation and defiance of it impossible.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I regard this bill as an improvement upon existing legislation, but, as I expressed myself when the bill was reported from the Interstate Commerce Committee, I also regard it as incomplete and fragmentary in character. I agree with the Senators from Wisconsin and Texas that this bill should have provided for a valuation of the railroads, and I also think that we should have prescribed the return which common carriers should receive upon such valuation. If we had done that we would have fixed the standard which would have guided the Interstate Commerce Commission in the determination of rates and done away with the objection urged against this bill that it delegates legislative power and discretion to an administrative tribunal.

THE NATIONAL GOVERNMENT ONLY IS CAPABLE OF PROPERLY CONTROLLING THE GREAT RAILROADS.

I think also that it would have been wise to provide in this act for the incorporation under national law of railroads engaged in interstate commerce. The great railroad systems of the country, though organized under State laws, are really national in character. The National Government is now controlling these great systems operating under State charters, which they have outgrown, and the nation alone is capable of dealing with them and controlling them in a comprehensive way.

We have prevented these State corporations engaged in interstate commerce from issuing free passes. We have legislated regarding the bookkeeping of these corporations, and have prescribed the manner in which they shall keep their books. We have provided for safety appliances for these State corporations, and we are about to fix the liability of these State corporations as employers. All these things and many others we have done in the line of regulation and control of State corporations, and yet we have hesitated to create the artificial beings that are to engage in interstate commerce.

NATIONAL INCORPORATION IS SURE TO COME.

Mr. President, I am confident that such legislation will some time come, and I believe it will come speedily. The Committee on Interstate Commerce has already authorized me to report to the Senate a bill providing for a commission to inquire into this matter, and I trust that it will pass both Houses and that we will have a commission which will frame and submit to Congress a national incorporation act for railroads.

TAXATION, VALUATION, AND RETURN SHOULD BE MATHEMATICALLY ADJUSTED.

I hope to see the time, Mr. President, when the transportation of the country will be unified and simplified under national law, when we shall have a rational rule providing for the taxing of all these corporations, one which will leave nothing to the judgment or discretion of the taxing officials. I trust we shall have a national incorporation act which will provide for the valuation of these roads and for a fair return upon that valuation. I hope that the time will come when taxation, valuation, and return will be so mathematically adjusted under fair rules prescribed by Congress that corporations will not be compelled to stay in politics in order to save their property from what they regard as the crushing power of taxation and regulation, the upper and the nether millstones between which they fear that railroad property may be ground to destruction.

THE NATIONALIZATION OF THE GREAT RAILWAY SYSTEMS.

I hope to see seven or eight great railway systems in this country nationalized, just as our banks have been nationalized. I hope to see a corporation that will embrace the New York Central system, the Great Northern Railway, and the Northern Pacific, stretching from ocean to ocean. I hope to see the Pennsylvania Railroad united with the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific and stretching from ocean to ocean. I hope to see the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad united with the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, stretching from ocean to ocean. I hope to see the great Southern Railroad united with the Southern Pacific system at New Orleans and stretching from ocean to ocean. I hope to see three or more great systems stretching from the Great Lakes to the Gulf. I hope to see each one of those systems not only engaged in interstate commerce, but also in foreign commerce by means of the great steamships which each of them will own.

A CONSOLIDATION OF THE RAILROADS AND THE STEAMSHIP LINES.

The ship-subsidy bill, which recently passed the Senate and is now pending in the House, provides, I believe, for twelve steamship lines, intended to open up new fields to our commerce, involving an expenditure of thirty or forty million dollars for steamships. It would be an easy matter for a corporation organized under a national law for the purpose of engaging in interstate and foreign commerce not only to own and operate a great transcontinental line stretching from ocean to ocean, or a great line stretching from the Lakes to the Gulf, but to own such steamships, and thus open these new fields to our commerce. It will be an easy matter for such great lines to own steamships that will communicate with Europe, Africa, and Asia, and it will be an easy thing for these great transportation systems to support such lines without the aid of subsidy from the Government, for they can so adjust their entire rates as to make such lines possible and profitable.

NATIONALIZATION OF INTERNAL WATER TRANSPORTATION.

I hope also to see the transportation systems of this country simplified by a proper utilization of the great rivers and lakes. We have now the Mississippi River and the Missouri River and the Ohio River and their tributaries opening up the entire interior of the country to the Gulf. It is now proposed to connect the Great Lakes with the Ohio by a canal only 100 miles long, and thus we will have one continuous system of water transportation from the Great Lakes through the canal down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers to the Gulf. A bill incorporating a national company for this purpose, with a capitalization of $35,000,000, has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate. It should be amended by providing for national ownership and construction of this canal. So vast a system of water transportation, embracing thousands and tens of thousands of miles and embracing all the great interior lakes and rivers, should not even for the space of 100 miles be under private ownership or control. Such a system of water transportation supplementing railroad transportation will do away with the present economic waste.

THE NEEDS OF OUR COMMERCE REQUIRE A SIMPLIFICATION OF OUR RAILWAY SYSTEMS.

Interstate and foreign commerce, scientifically conducted, require the unification and the simplification of our railroad systems under national laws and the highest development of the waterways under national control. Germany has thus made transportation a science and an aid to her production and external commerce. Her railroad transportation, her river and canal transportation, and her steamship transportation all dovetail into each other as parts of a great machine intended for the promotion of her commerce. Our development has been accidental rather than scientific. A marvelous development has been accomplished, notwithstanding inadequate legislation. With comprehensive legislation we can bind together the transportation of the Lakes, the canals, the rivers, the sea, and the railroads in such a way as to constitute a perfect machinery in aid of production and commerce.

NATIONAL INCORPORATION THE SOLUTION.

This can be accomplished only by the National Government, under its powers relating to interstate and foreign commerce. Under a national incorporation act, providing for the construction of new lines and the consolidation of existing lines, as well as for the ownership of steamship lines, prescribing a just rule for taxation of railroad property by the States, as in the case of our national banks, guarding against overcapitalization by requiring the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission of all bond and stock issues, fixing a fair return upon capital, preventing rebates and discrimination, and providing an insurance and a pension fund for employees, and for conciliation of disputes between the corporations and their employees, we will gradually work out a scientific system of transportation which will bring not only the highest development of our commerce, but industrial peace.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I shall not trespass upon the Senate to make a speech, because I, with other Senators, have spoken enough, and the Senate is tired of talk. Neither will I go into any analysis of this bill, because Senators understand it as well as I do. I will vote for it because it is the best I can get, and Senators will all, I presume, with two or three exceptions, do the same thing, some of them from one point of view and some from another.

I do not want to lay down the responsibility which has been imposed upon me when this bill was thrust into my hands without saying—because I believe it to be due him—that but for the work of Theodore Roosevelt, in bringing this matter to the attention of the country and proclaiming in and out of season his desire and purpose or hope to get effective rate legislation, we would not have any bill at all. It is true that the idea was not his; that it was announced in three successive Democratic platforms. Nevertheless he seized upon it, and whatever success may come from it will be due largely to him.

That we could have got a better bill I have no doubt, and therefore I can not congratulate him on his victory. That he has surrendered I will not now assert, though everything points in that direction. I can not congratulate the Republican party for this legislation, because it will pass with practical unanimity; and while the G. O. P. is now lined up, with possibly one exception, all to vote for this measure, there are wounds to heal and some scars will remain, and there are some bitter memories associated with this session of Congress in connection with this legislation.

We could have had a far better bill if the President's first contention had been put in it—that is, the narrowest possible court review; the strongest possible restraint of the power of injunction. But we have got a bill, and if it shall fail, as the Senator from Texas says, to give the relief the people had a right to demand, it will be because the people themselves will go to sleep. The railroads may be depended upon to resume as soon as they dare their purpose, long exploited and carried out, of charging all the traffic will bear. They may for a time feel that it is wiser not to appeal to the courts too soon or to endeavor to annul or to set aside the acts of the Commission. But with those things I have nothing now to do. The fight will be continued, I am very certain.

I want to say one thing more. I am very glad that my responsibility, small as it has been, merely in charge of a bill without a committee behind me, here ends, and while I can not congratulate the Senate upon anything much in connection with the bill, I do congratulate it that we are in sight of a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HALE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, before the roll call begins I desire to present to the Senate a statement sent me by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. The Senator is confined to his room in this city by illness, and will not be able to be present to-day to vote on the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Secretary will read the statement.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATEMENT OF MR. DUBOIS.

"I very much preferred to vote for the so-called 'Long amendment.' I am opposed to the so-called 'Allison amendment' which, in my judgment, confers upon the courts the power to fix the rates. I wanted Congress to delegate to the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority to fix rates and confine authority of the courts to the determination as to whether Congress had exceeded its constitutional power as to whether the rate fixed by the Commission was confiscatory. There are so many wise provisions in the bill in the interest of the shipper and the public that I desire to vote for it and authorize you, as my pair, to vote for the bill as presented to the Senate."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TELLER (when Mr. ALDRICH's name was called). I was requested by the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr.

ALDRICH] to say that if he were present, he would vote for the bill.

Mr. WETMORE. I was about to make the same statement.

Mr. ALGER (when the name of Mr. BURROWS was called). My colleague [Mr. BURROWS] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LONG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], but according to his statement he would vote for the bill if present, and therefore I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER (when Mr. PATTERSON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PATTERSON] is absent from the city, and is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KEAN (when Mr. PLATT'S name was called). The senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] is unavoidably absent. I am authorized to say that if he were present, he would vote "yea."

While I am on my feet I will state that the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] is detained from the Senate by illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. SUTHERLAND'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is unavoidably detained from the Senate to-day. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). On all political questions I am paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. He authorized me to vote on amendments as I saw fit and to vote on the question of the passage of the bill. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably detained from the city. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote for the bill.

Mr. MCLAURIN. If my colleague [Mr. MONEY] were present, and not paired, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. NEWLANDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], but the understanding was that we were at liberty to vote upon this bill. I vote "yea." I wish also to announce that the Senator from South Dakota, if he were here, would also vote "yea." He is unavoidably absent.

The result was announced—yeas 71, nays 3, as follows:

YEAS—71.

Alger	Clarke, Ark.	Hale	Newlands

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the bill be printed with the amendments numbered as is done in the case of appropriation bills. It adds very much to the convenience of conferees in handling it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HALE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 16472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, with amendments, and I submit a report thereon. I give notice that I shall call up the bill on Monday morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

AGRICULTURAL LANDS IN FOREST RESERVES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17576) to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference requested by the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. CARTER, Mr. FLINT, and Mr. DUBOIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9297) for the relief of Henry E. Rhoades, assistant engineer, United States Navy, retired; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 21, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 18, 1906.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

Charles C. Houpt, of Minnesota, to be United States attorney for the district of Minnesota. A reappointment, his term expiring June 2, 1906.

MARSHAL.

Frank S. Elgin, of Tennessee, to be United States marshal for the western district of Tennessee. A reappointment, his term expiring June 27, 1906.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Capt. Charles S. Sperry to be a rear-admiral in the Navy from the 26th day of May, 1906, vice Rear-Admiral Thomas Perry, to be retired.

MISSISSIPPI.

John P. Bennett to be postmaster at Yazoo City, in the county of Yazoo and State of Mississippi.

Drewy W. Rhyne to be postmaster at Lexington, in the county of Holmes and State of Mississippi.

Eugene E. Robertson to be postmaster at Collins, in the county of Covington and State of Mississippi.

Neal M. Woods to be postmaster at Water Valley, in the county of Yalobusha and State of Mississippi.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

John B. Cooper to be postmaster at Newport, in the county of Sullivan and State of New Hampshire.

OHIO.

Atwell E. Ferguson to be postmaster at Gibsonburg, in the county of Sandusky and State of Ohio.

OKLAHOMA.

Jasper N. Perkins to be postmaster at Temple, in the county of Comanche and Territory of Oklahoma.

F. Everett Purcell to be postmaster at Enid, in the county of Garfield and Territory of Oklahoma.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Elmer E. Fleming to be postmaster at Haverford, in the county of Montgomery and State of Pennsylvania.

Elmer E. McCracken to be postmaster at North Wales, in the county of Montgomery and State of Pennsylvania.

William McElhaney to be postmaster at Pencoyd, in the county of Montgomery and State of Pennsylvania.

TEXAS.

Gomer S. Williams to be postmaster at Cisco, in the county of Eastland and State of Texas.

Henry Zweifel to be postmaster at Granbury, in the county of Hood and State of Texas.

WASHINGTON.

Lewis E. Hardy to be postmaster at Kent, in the county of King and State of Washington.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 18, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Journal be approved.

The question was taken; and the Journal was approved.

REPRINT OF BILLS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of Senate bill 4805 and Senate bill 4806.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the reprint of the two Senate bills indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PRINTING OF CERTAIN DATA.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have printed as a document, for the use of the House in connection with the consideration of House bill 8989, the data which have been collected in respect to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to have printed as a document certain memoranda which have been collected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Objection is made, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

CLAIMS ON PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

HENRY E. RHOADES.

The first bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9297) for the relief of Henry E. Rhoades, assistant engineer, United States Navy, retired.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to transfer Asst. Engineer Henry E. Rhoades, upon the retired list of the United States Navy, from the half-pay list to the 75 per cent pay list of retired officers, under section 1588 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to take effect from the date of his retirement.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL LEE, DECEASED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 850) making appropriation to pay the estate of Samuel Lee, deceased, in full for any claim for pay and allowances made by reason of election of said Lee to the Forty-seventh Congress and his services therein.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal representative of the estate of Samuel Lee, deceased, the sum of $10,482.80, the same being in full for any claim for pay and allowances made by reason of the election of said Lee to the Forty-seventh Congress and his services therein.

Also the following committee amendment:

Strike out in line 4, after word "legal," all of said line, and in line 5 all of line up to word "the." Insert in lieu thereof the words "representatives of the estate of Samuel Lee, deceased, to wit, Samuel Lee, Anna Lee Andrews, Clarence Lee, Robert Lee, Harry A. Lee, and Phillip Lee, heirs at law."

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, the Lee bill just read by the Clerk was quite fully discussed when we were in the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar the last time. I now ask unanimous consent of this committee that the bill which bears the Calendar No. 2494, for the relief of the Postal Telegraph Company, may be now taken up, and the consideration of the Lee claim laid aside until the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company's bill is disposed of. The reason I make that request is that the claim of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company is conceded by the Government to be a just one, and the money is due that company for services actually rendered to the Government.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I think I shall object to the request now and save any further discussion.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I will change the form of my request. I now ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the Lee case be postponed until the hour of 3 o'clock. I make that motion for the benefit of every Member of this House interested in any claim bill upon the Calendar, both on the Republican and Democratic side. It is unfair to Members having claims upon the Calendar awaiting their disposition to be compelled to have those claims laid aside and not considered; for if the Lee claim is to be taken up ahead of the other claims on this day's Calendar I fear too much time will be consumed to reach claims the consideration of which ought not to be delayed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] asks unanimous consent that the bill which has just been read be laid aside until 3 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I move that the consideration of the Lee claim be postponed until the hour of 3 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order. The Chair understands that the debate is closed.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that when this bill was previously under consideration in the committee that motion was made and voted down by the committee. It is therefore not in order at this time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Is not a motion to lay a bill on the table at the present time in order? We have read the bill, and are considering it. Is it not in order for a Member of this House to move that it do now lie upon the table?

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing in order now except the vote upon this bill (H. R. 850), on the question of laying it aside.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill for the relief of the heirs of Samuel Lee——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] that the Chair is informed that when this bill was heretofore under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House general debate was closed, and is, therefore, not now in order.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] moves that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute that the bill be reported to the House with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves, as a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from Kansas, or rather as a preferential motion, that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. The question is, first, on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SULZER. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 97.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 86.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas, to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes to make a statement in connection with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to be heard for two minutes, to make a statement with reference to the bill. Is there objection? [Cries of "Regular order!"] The regular order is demanded, which is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I hope there will be no objection. The gentleman from Tennessee made the report, as he says, under a misapprehension, I understand; and I think he ought to have an opportunity to make a statement to the committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following title:

H. R. 8976. An act to change the line of the reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and of Reserve avenue; and

H. R. 13938. An act to extend the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, to the port of Oswego, N. Y.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 1739. An act granting a pension to Henry Sistrunk;

S. 5670. An act granting an increase of pension to Isaac L. Duggar; and

S. 6128. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pend d'Oreille River in Stevens County, Wash., by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company.

SAMUEL LEE, DECEASED.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The committee will suspend business until all gentlemen are seated. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to be heard for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I have made this request, deeming it to be fair to myself, and, what is of greater importance, fair to the House, in view of the fact that this report is made in my name. This bill was reported from the Committee on Claims in the very early days of the work of that committee, before the subcommittees had been thoroughly organized and at work; and this bill was not considered by a subcommittee, but was called up in the Committee of the Whole, in my time, by the chairman, Mr. MILLER, of Kansas, as an accommodation to the gentleman from Tennessee, who introduced the bill. The report is simply a reprint of favorable reports in past Congresses. It had had five favorable reports from prior Congresses, with no minority report; and, relying upon those favorable reports, it was assumed that it was following the precedents of the House. But I have since learned, from a thorough investigation, that it will itself set a precedent in the payment to a Member of a salary when that Member was never sworn in in the House. Feeling, therefore, that it would be setting a dangerous precedent to allow this as a salary, I shall vote against the motion to report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation and against the bill in the House. I do not purpose going into the merits of the election contest, but simply make this statement to the end that I may register my opposition to setting this dangerous precedent.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire now to ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion I have just made. My attention has just been called to the fact that we made some amendments to this bill, and I want the amendments acted upon before the motion to report the bill favorably is passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was your motion?

Mr. MILLER. To lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, Mr. Chairman, without putting the gentleman to the necessity of wasting his time, I shall object.

Mr. MILLER. To what?

Mr. WILLIAMS. To your request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask gentlemen to suspend until the Chair ascertains what was done when this bill was last before the committee.

Mr. MILLER. It is possible that those amendments were agreed to, but I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the amendments were agreed to. Before the Chair entertains the motion he wishes to be first advised as to a certain point in the former proceedings on this bill. [After a pause.] The Chair desires to make a statement. A few moments ago the gentleman from Georgia made a motion that this bill be reported with a recommendation that it lie on the table. The Chair, without being fully advised as to former proceedings, ruled that the motion was out of order, and has taken time to ascertain exactly what was done on the former occasion. The fact appears to be that the last thing which was done in Committee of the Whole, when the bill was before the committee on the former occasion, was to vote down a motion that it be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table It seems, therefore, to the Chair that there having been, so far as this bill is concerned, no business intervening, the similar motion made by the gentleman from Georgia was correctly ruled not in order. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. For the purpose of making an inquiry of the gentleman as to the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague have time to make his inquiry.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. As a matter of fairness——

Mr. MILLER. I object.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I want to know whether it is a fact——
Mr. GROSVENOR. Regular order!
The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.
Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Is there any objection to bringing out the true facts about this claim?
The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.
Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Will it not now be in order to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Claims?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it will be in order to move that it be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be so recommitted.
Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I mean. I then move that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that that motion has preference over the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER]. The gentleman from Kansas moved that the bill be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that it be reported with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi is the preferential motion, and that the question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi, that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Would it be in order now for me to state my reasons for making that motion?
The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi, that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.
The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SULZER) there were—ayes 66, noes 86.
Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. KLINE, and Mr. ELLERBE demanded tellers.
Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. MILLER and Mr. WILLIAMS.
The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 98.
Accordingly the motion was rejected.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER], that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman——
The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. WILLIAMS. I was trying my best to get the attention of the Chair while the Chair was in transitu. I wish to move to strike out the enacting clause.
Mr. MILLER. Regular order!
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the stage of amendment has passed, and that the motion of the gentleman is not in order. The Chair thinks nothing is in order except the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to lay the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.
The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MILLER, on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 103, noes 84.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us have tellers, Mr. Chairman.
Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. MILLER and Mr. WILLIAMS.
The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 96, noes 74.
Accordingly the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.
Mr. MILLER. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bills to the House.
Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman——
The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. GOLDFOGLE. For the purpose of asking the gentleman from Kansas whether it would not be fair to the Members, both on his side and on mine, to permit this committee to continue the consideration of these claims that are fair and just.
Mr. MILLER. Regular order!
The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas that the committee do now rise.
The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 94, noes 76.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.
Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. MILLER and Mr. WILLIAMS.
The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 75.
So the motion was agreed to.
The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9297) for the relief of Henry E. Rhodes, assistant engineer, United States Navy, retired, and had instructed him to report the same to the House without amendment, and with the recommendation that the bill do pass; also that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 850) making appropriation to pay the estate of Samuel Lee, deceased, in full for any claim for pay and allowances made by reason of the election of said Lee to the Forty-seventh Congress and his services therein, and had instructed him to report the same with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.
Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on these two bills and amendments to the final passage.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Before that is done we should like to have the title of the first bill reported to the House.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.
The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9297) for the relief of Henry E. Rhodes, assistant engineer, United States Navy, retired.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves the previous question to the final passage of the bill.
The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MILLER) there were—ayes 118, noes 81.
Mr. WILLIAMS. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 69, answered "present" 17, not voting 152, as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. RHINOCK.

Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. TOWNE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am informed that the previous question which has just been voted upon was on two separate bills; I would like to ask if that is true?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it was on House bill 9297.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then it was only on one bill?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have my name called, I did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and in his seat and giving attention when his name should have been called?

Mr. CURTIS. I was.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman did not hear it?

Mr. CURTIS. I did not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CURTIS, and he answered aye, as above recorded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask how I am recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded in the negative.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to change my vote to the affirmative.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. WILLIAMS, and he voted aye, as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi enters a motion to reconsider.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order on that motion that the motion is dilatory.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to reconsider be withdrawn and that the gentleman from Pennsylvania who reported this bill have ten minutes in favor of it and that gentlemen on this side have ten minutes discussion against it.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is equivalent to an objection. The gentleman from Kansas makes the point that the motion to reconsider is dilatory. The yeas upon this vote are 143, the nays are 69, present 17. There can be no doubt but that the vote is substantially correct. The Chair will cause to be read section 10 of Rule XVI.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on that point of order.

The SPEAKER. One moment. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Clerk will read the rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, Mr. Speaker, I think that when a point of order is made that a motion is dilatory——

The SPEAKER. One moment. The gentleman will suspend, and the Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

No dilatory motion shall be entertained by the Speaker.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman makes the point of order that this motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is a point of order which above all things is open to discussion by the man who makes the motion.

The SPEAKER. Not at all, the Chair will say to the gentleman from Mississippi, because if it were open for discussion and open for appeal, the gentleman can see at once that would heap one dilatory motion, if this be dilatory, upon another, and the rule itself would be nullified. Now, the Chair having had clause 10 of Rule XVI read, and the vote being as the Chair stated, 143 yeas and 69 nays, it is perfectly patent to the Chair and, in the opinion of the Chair, to every Member of this House, including the gentleman from Mississippi, that this is a dilatory motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in order to emphasize the difference of opinion existing between the Chair and the gentleman from Mississippi, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just stated that the very object of the rule would be defeated if a motion to appeal were entertained, and it is so patent that it is dilatory that the Chair would be willing to put the question to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] himself on his word. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi is of the opinion——

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That if the Chair would give the gentleman five minutes he could possibly convince this House that this bill ought not to pass.

Mr. MILLER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Such is the confidence of the gentleman from Mississippi in the open-mindedness of the House.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put to the House, I desire to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs, with instructions to strike out the provisions for back pay.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order on that motion that it is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the motion is not now in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I shall make that motion at the proper time. I know that is not dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 143, noes 61.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for tellers.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One moment, Mr. Speaker. Who has called for the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggest to somebody else to call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Then, Mr. Speaker, I now call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now the yeas and nays are called for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 135, nays 62, answered "present" 17, not voting 167, as follows:

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For the vote:

Mr. DIXON of Montana with Mr. HOUSTON.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan with Mr. BURLESON.

Mr. GILBERT of Indiana with Mr. GARRETT.

Mr. LOVERING with Mr. GREGG.

Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. PUJO.

Mr. TAWNEY with Mr. BARTLETT.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio with Mr. TALBOTT.

Mr. DRESSER with Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

For the day:

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware with Mr. BELL of Georgia.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas with Mr. COCKRAN.

Mr. HOGG with Mr. TOWNE.

Mr. LORIMER with Mr. GRANGER.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. One moment; as soon as the bill is read.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I now move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs with instructions to strike out the following language: "from the date of his retirement," and to insert in its stead the language "from the date of the passage of this bill."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Under the orders previously adopted, I understand that there can be no debate.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 110.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the yeas and nays are ordered under the rule. As many as are in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi will, as their names are called, answer "aye;" as many as are opposed will answer "no;" those not voting will answer "present;" and the Sergeant-at-Arms is instructed to bring in absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 63, nays 145, answered "present" 21, not voting 152, as follows:

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For the vote:

Mr. BIRDSALL with Mr. KELIHER.

Mr. BISHOP with Mr. SMITH of Maryland.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado with Mr. GREGG.

Mr. CONNER with Mr. GILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan with Mr. BURLESON.

Mr. GILBERT of Indiana with Mr. GARRETT.

Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey with Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts.

Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. PUJO.

For the day:

Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. HOUSTON.

Mr. MCKINNEY with Mr. HENRY of Texas.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, on the last vote I was paired with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILBERT], with the agreement that if he had not returned by the time this vote was taken it should go over and apply to this vote. I wish to inquire whether the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILBERT] has voted?

The SPEAKER. He did not vote. Call the gentleman's name.

Mr. GARRETT's name was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the Speaker to this fact in connection with the call of the roll as a matter of privilege of the House: The Clerk called the name of Mr. SPARKMAN of Florida, and answered aye for him. Mr. SPARKMAN is neither in the Hall nor in the city, and I think it would be well for the Speaker to admonish the gentlemen at the desk to be more careful.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi that the officials of the House at the Clerk's desk were immediately in front of the Speaker not only during this Congress, but last Congress, and the Chair very cheerfully bears testimony to their efficiency and integrity. [Applause.] The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi to the fact that with this great Hall and the great membership and the galleries it would be strange indeed if now and then a mistake was not made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the facts which the Speaker has mentioned. I am aware of the fact that my own hearing is not good, and yet notwithstanding that fact it was perfectly plain to me that Mr. SPARKMAN did not answer and the Clerk proceeded to answer for him.

The SPEAKER. I have no doubt that is correct. The Clerk in calling the roll, where he hears a response——

Mr. WILLIAMS. There was no response.

The SPEAKER (continuing). Where he hears no reponse, and in the confusion believe he hears a response, in good faith repeats the name afterwards.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not, Mr. Speaker, attacking the good faith of anybody. I am entirely suggesting. I brought this matter up for the purpose of obtaining a more careful calling of the roll, especially when the question of the determination of whether a quorum is present or not is involved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi states that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] is not here and was not present when his name was called.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And his colleague from Florida [Mr. CLARK] informs me he is not in the city.

The SPEAKER. The statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], of course, will be taken, and the name of Mr. SPARKMAN expunged from the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, my reason for bringing it to the attention of this House was this: Several times I have thought, but have never been certain, and may in every case have been mistaken, that similar occurrences have happened. In this case I was certain and I subsequestly determined the fact. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question in on the passage of the bill. The doors will be opened.

Mr. SULZER. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. What is the point?

Mr. SULZER. I want to know if the bill has been engrossed?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the Speaker announced the bill?

The SPEAKER. This vote is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SULZER. The bill can not be passed unless engrossed.

The SPEAKER. It can not.

Mr. SULZER. I make the point of order that the bill has not been engrossed.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled. The statement is not true. The bill has been engrossed, and the question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I inquired in a parliamentary way if the bill had been engrossed and was informed it could not have been in the time which has elapsed.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division!

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 68, answered "present" 16, not voting 169, as follows:

YEAS—128.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. GILBERT of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I want to vote aye.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall of the House when his name was called and did not hear it?

Mr. GILBERT of Indiana. I was just coming in when my name was called. I heard my name.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not entitled to vote under the rule.

Mr. GILBERT of Indiana. I was just entering when my name was called.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman hear his name?

Mr. GILBERT of Indiana. I heard my name as I entered the door, but I did not know what our vote was.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman heard his name called and did not vote.

Mr. GILBERT of Indiana. That is right.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the gentleman is not entitled to vote.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILBERT] and myself were paired. I answered "present." The gentleman from Indiana entered the door just about as his name was called on the second roll call. He perhaps did not hear it, because he had just entered the Chamber. I am not interested in it myself.

The SPEAKER. Well, the question of pairs is for gentlemen to arrange among themselves.

Mr. GARRETT. It is arranged, and the record is correct. I merely make that statement in justice to the gentleman.

The following additional pairs were announced:

On this vote:

Mr. ALEXANDER with Mr. WEBB.

Mr. CONNER with Mr. SIMS.

Mr. MUDD with Mr. MCNARY.

Mr. FOSS with Mr. PUJO.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

ESTATE OF SAMUEL LEE, DECEASED.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 850)——

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did I understand the gentleman to move to reconsider?

Mr. MILLER. I did not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed.

Mr. MILLER. May I inquire of the gentleman from Mississippi if he voted in the affirmative on the last bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The "gentleman from Mississippi" did not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 850)——

Mr. MCNARY. I renew the motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the question was asked by the gentleman from Kansas, whether "the gentleman from Mississippi" had voted in the affirmative. Immediately upon that the gentleman from Massachusetts made the motion which the gentleman from Mississippi previously had made.

The SPEAKER. But the vote had been announced prior to that time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But no motion to reconsider had been made when the announcement was made.

The SPEAKER. Why, the gentleman from Massachusetts did not vote, as it seems from the record.

Mr. MCNARY. I was paired in the affirmative. [Cries of "Ah!"]

Mr. PAYNE. Then, of course, he had no right to move to reconsider.

Mr. MCNARY. You mean because I was paired I could not vote.

Mr. PAYNE. Not at all.

Mr. MCNARY. What rule is there if a man is present that he can not vote?

Mr. PAYNE. Pairs do not count.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's name is not recorded in the affirmative; and as the Chair understands, it is the RECORD and not the Journal that takes notice of the pairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman arise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MILLER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 51, nays 150, answered "present" 16, not voting 164.

Mr. BOWERS. I desire to change my vote from "aye" to "no."
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.
The Clerk called the name of Mr. BOWERS, and he answered in the negative.
Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know how I am recorded?
The SPEAKER. In the affirmative.
Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to change my vote from "aye" to "no."
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.
The Clerk called the name of Mr. HEFLIN, and he answered in the negative.
Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know how I am recorded?
The SPEAKER. In the affirmative.
Mr. CANDLER. I wish to change my vote from "aye" to "no."
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.
The Clerk called the name of Mr. CANDLER, and he voted in the negative.
Mr. MACON. I should like to know how I am recorded?
The SPEAKER. In the affirmative.
Mr. MACON. I desire to change my vote.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.
The Clerk called the name of Mr. MACON, and he voted in the negative.
Mr. STANLEY. I should like to ask how I am recorded?
The SPEAKER. In the affirmative.
Mr. STANLEY. I should like to change my vote from "aye" to "no."
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.
The Clerk called the name of Mr. STANLEY, and he voted in the negative.
Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire how I am recorded.
The SPEAKER. In the affirmative.
Mr. GILLESPIE. I should like to change my vote from "aye" to "no."
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.
The Clerk called the name of Mr. GILLESPIE, and he voted in the negative.
Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH] voted?
The SPEAKER. He did not.
Mr. SHEPPARD. How am I recorded?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded as "present."
Mr. SHEPPARD. That is all right.
Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?
The SPEAKER. In the affirmative.
Mr. ADAMSON. I do not feel at all satisfied, and wish to change that vote.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.
The Clerk called the name of Mr. ADAMSON, and he voted in the negative.
Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.
The Clerk called the name of Mr. HAY, and he voted in the negative.
Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?
The SPEAKER. In the affirmative.
Mr. KELIHER. I desire to change my vote to "no."
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.
The Clerk called the name of Mr. KELIHER, and he voted in the negative.
Mr. KLINE. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEEMER]. I desire to know how I am recorded.
The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman vote?
Mr. KLINE. I did; I voted "present."
The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded "present."
Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I should like to ask how I am recorded.
The SPEAKER. In the affirmative.
Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I desire to change my vote.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.
The Clerk called the name of Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi, and he voted in the negative.

Mr. BURLESON. I should like to know if I am recorded as voting?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.
Mr. BURLESON. In order to be sure that there is a quorum present——
The SPEAKER. On this question, the ayes are 51, the noes are 150. The noes have it, and the House refuses to adjourn.

ESTATE OF SAMUEL LEE, DECEASED.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill H. R. 850 and the amendments to its final passage.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, on that bill I desire to raise the question of consideration.
Mr. GROSVENOR. To that I make a point of order.
The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon what ground does the Chair sustain the point of order?
The SPEAKER. On the ground that it is evidently dilatory.
Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 135, nays 62, answered "present" 19, not voting 165, as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania with Mr. BARTLETT.

Mr. ALEXANDER with Mr. CLAYTON.

For the balance of the day:

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey with Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee.

Mr. GILLETT of California with Mr. SULZER.

Mr. WACHTER with Mr. TALBOTT.

Mr. VAN WINKLE with Mr. RYAN.

Mr. GOEBEL with Mr. GLASS.

Mr. COUSINS with Mr. RIXEY.

On this vote:

Mr. MONDELL with Mr. RANDELL of Texas.

Mr. GRAFF with Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado with Mr. GREGG.

Mr. TAWNEY with Mr. MANN.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One moment, Mr. Speaker; is the Chair about to put the amendments in gross? I want a separate vote on each amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment to the title will come after the passage of the bill. There is an amendment to strike out and insert, and under the rule that is not divisible, so that there is really only one amendment to the bill.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether the present names in the amendment——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is not in order; the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to ask the chairman of the committee——

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls for the regular order, which is, in effect, an objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. MILLER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 119, nays 40, answered "present" 21, not voting 202, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For the vote:

Mr. BARCHFELD with Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado with Mr. GREGG.

Mr. GILBERT of Indiana with Mr. FITZGERALD.

For the balance of the day:

Mr. BENNETT of Kentucky with Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. MCCALL with Mr. SPIGHT.

Mr. AMES with Mr. CLARK of Florida.

Mr. BATES with Mr. BURGESS.

Mr. CALDER with Mr. GILLESPIE.

Mr. CALDERHEAD wtih Mr. HAY.

Mr. DALE with Mr. HEFLIN.

Mr. HAMILTON with Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi.

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. MCNARY.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut with Mr. RANDELL of Texas.

Mr. HINSHAW with Mr. RUSSELL.

Mr. KINKAID with Mr. SHACKLEFORD.

Mr. HEDGE with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. MCCREARY of Pennsylvania with Mr. SIMS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair notes the presence of the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. STEENERSON. The Clerk will call his name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. STEENERSON, and he answered "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CANNON, and he answered "present."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recorded as present.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. MADDEN, and he answered "present."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, under what rule of the House is this proceeding? The roll has been called; the roll has been terminated. What right has any Member of the House to come up afterwards and be recorded?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read section 2 of Rule XV.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the absence of a quorum, fifteen Members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent Members, and in all calls of the House the doors shall be closed, the names of the Members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured and retained; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged. Members who voluntarily appear shall, unless the House otherwise directs, be immediately admitted to the Hall of the House, and they shall report their names to the Clerk to be entered upon the Journal as present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, that rule is familiar, but it is absolutely inapplicable now. There has been no point of no quorum thus far raised. There has been no order to close the doors and to call for a quorum, and that rule is applicable only to that stage of the House's proceedings, and not to the present stage.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will also read clause 3 of Rule XV.

The Clerk read as follows:

On the demand of any Member, or at the suggestion of the Speaker, the names of Members sufficient to make a quorum in the Hall of the House who do not vote, shall be noted by the Clerk and recorded in the Journal, and reported to the Speaker with the names of the Members voting and be counted and announced in determining the presence of a quorum to do business.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will also read section 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

Upon every roll call the names of the Members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, in which case the name of the State shall be added; and if there be two such Members from the same State, the whole name shall be called; and after the roll has been once called, the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair unless the Member's name has been noted under clause 3 of this rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. One moment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That limits the situation to the case where the Member's name has been noted under clause 3, but it does not apply to this situation at all.

The SPEAKER. So far the Chair has noted the gentleman from Minnesota——

Mr. WILLIAMS. No suggestion of the absence of a quorum has been made to the House by the Chair or anyone——

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows from the record.

Mr. PAYNE. The Speaker can make that suggestion. It is not kind of the gentleman from Mississippi at all——

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Speaker has not made it. Mr. Speaker, the rules contemplate not a private order by the Speaker to the clerks of this House, but a suggestion to the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And the Speaker has never made any such suggestion. Certainly the rule which says "upon the suggestion" of any Member or the Speaker meant a suggestion to the House, not to the clerical officials of the House.

The SPEAKER. It is an immaterial contention. The Clerk will erase the names of Mr. STEENERSON and Mr. MADDEN from the roll and note them as being present, and give the Chair——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair must have a minute to ascertain the status of the vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah, but the Chair is not ruling; the Chair is acting.

The SPEAKER. Precisely; and the Chair in his action will submit it to the House a little later on.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, if the Speaker please, when the rules provide that certain things shall be done upon the suggestion of a lack of a quorum, then it is upon that contingency, and upon that alone, that the things can be done, and the Speaker has not yet even suggested the lack of a quorum to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the vote. On this vote the ayes are 118, and the noes are 40, answering present 22, and the Chair, under clause 3 of Rule XV, announces the presence of the following gentlemen whom the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Messrs. BOWERS, CLARK of Missouri, ELLERBE, GARNER, GILL, GILLESPIE, MCNARY, RANDELL of Texas, RUSSELL, SHACKLEFORD, SULLIVAN of Massachusetts, SIMS, WALLACE, HAMILTON, STEENERSON, MADDEN, and BARCHFELD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Also note the presence of Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota, Mr. TAWNEY, and Mr. HOWELL of Utah, in addition to those already read, and then the Chair will make a revised announcement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to be heard on what the Chair has done.

The SPEAKER. One moment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I submit——

Mr. KEIFER. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not losing any right as a Representative. Upon this vote the yeas are 118, the nays are 40, answering present 22, and noted as present by the Speaker, under Rule XV, 20 gentlemen whose names have been announced; in all, 200, a quorum, and the yeas have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order because I want a ruling upon it, and I do not think the Chair will differ with me about the facts. I make the point of order that in the absence——

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman can not make the point of order——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am making a point or order, and the gentleman can not tell whether it is a good point of order until he hears it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman arises, as he states, to a point of order, and the Chair——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Affecting the result of the vote.

The SPEAKER (continuing). Will through courtesy listen to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and I hope not only through courtesy, but through a desire to do right, and I know that. Now, Mr. Speaker, the point of order is this, that without any suggestion to the House having been made at all of the absence of a quorum and at a state of the roll call when it was impossible for the Speaker or anybody else to know whether there was going to be disclosed the fact of a quorum or of no quorum, the Speaker in several of these cases noted gentlemen as being present in the Hall at the beginning of the roll call, when there was not only no suggestion of the absence of a quorum, but when the Speaker himself neither knew nor could have known that there would be the absence of a quorum. I recall notably the name of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BOWERS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. Clause 3 of Rule XV the Chair will read, instead of having it read as formerly. It states:

On the demand of any Member, or at the suggestion of the Speaker, the names of Members sufficient to make a quorum in the Hall of the House who do not vote, shall be noted by the Clerk and recorded in the Journal, and reported to the Speaker with the names of the Members voting and be counted and announced in determining the presence of a quorum to do business.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

The Chair has faithfully followed the rule, and again announces, as he announced before——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair again announces the result of the vote and the presence of the gentlemen whose names have been noted heretofore and are to go upon the Journal; and those voting "aye" and those voting "no," those answering "present" and those noted literally under clause 3 of Rule XV, number 200—a quorum. The ayes have it, and the question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is not the first time in the history of the world that men have applauded when——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I want now to propound a parliamentary inquiry. I rise to the question of privilege of the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am "in the regular order." Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend. All gentlemen will be seated. The vote has been announced, a quorum is present, and the next step under the operation of the previous question is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege.

Mr. KEIFER. Regular order!

Mr. WILLIAMS. And of the highest privilege at that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will state it. As I am informed by him, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], as an instance of the effect of this ruling, is recorded twice—once as answering "present" and once as being noted "present." I mention this as a commentary upon the manner in which it is done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is not upon the list which the Chair announced.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Chair read my name on the list. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. SHEPPARD. He did.

The SPEAKER. As a question of fact the name of the gentleman is not upon the list, and, if it had been, there is still a quorum—199.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry now, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the Speaker to have ruled that the Chair need not make the suggestion of the absence of a quorum to the House, but that he can make it to the Clerk. Now, then, this is my inquiry—whether the rule requires that the Speaker or one of his clerks shall count a quorum.

Mr. KEIFER. That rule has been read two or three times.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that a copy of the rules be furnished the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, then, I leave the matter of fact to the Speaker as to whether it was the Speaker or his parliamentary clerk who noted the presence of Members supposed to be present by that report. I know that the counting is a duty devolving on the Speaker personally.

The SPEAKER. The Chair in this matter of an ascertainment of a quorum is exercising his best vigilance and discretion, and all things that have happened in the ascertainment of a quorum the Chair is responsible for. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, of course. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Now, the Speaker having overruled the point of order which I made, I now respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair; and that is not dilatory.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point that it is dilatory—plainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not dilatory.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing to appeal from; and if there was something at this stage to appeal from, the Chair, under another rule of the House, would sustain the point of order that the appeal is dilatory.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, then the Chair would sustain a thing based on no fact——

Mr. PAYNE (and others). Regular order!

Mr. WILLIAMS (continuing). Founded upon no fact; and the Chair ought to know it——

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS (continuing). Because I do not believe the Chair has ruled correctly, and until the House has denounced it, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The question—with all due courtesy and respect to the gentleman, the question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the regular order is upon the appeal from the decision of the Chair——

Mr. OLMSTED. A parliamentary inquiry is never subject to appeal.

Mr. WILLIAMS (continuing). That the Chair can make the suggestion of the absence of a quorum to the clerks instead of to the House.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, there can be no appeal from a fact ascertained under the rules or on a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There can not be that. [Cries of "Regular order!"] But there can be an appeal from the manner of ascertaining the fact, and there can be an appeal from an exercise of authority in a contingency where no authority is vested in the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair again suggests that he is responsible for the action that has been had under the roll call, under the rules, with the presence of 200 Members.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Speaker then declines to permit the House to pass upon his ruling?

Mr. KEIFER. He has no power if he wanted to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does decline, simply because it is a question of fact to be shown by the Journal; and there can be no appeal touching such a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But does not the Speaker see that there is a difference of opinion as to his right to count under these circumstances?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. One moment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Chair has enough authority to protect himself without the aid of the gentleman.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know. The gentleman from Mississippi seems to think he has it all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Mississippi does not seem to think anything of the kind. He is not of the sort who "seem to think." He thinks. The gentleman from New York seems to think.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already ruled in the premises and declines to entertain the appeal for the reasons specified. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill. As many as are in favor——

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. For the purpose of moving to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I make the point of order that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker—— [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. BEALL of Texas. Division!

Mr. MILLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. On this question the ayes are 130, the noes 40; not a quorum. The doors will be closed. The yeas and nays will be called. Those in favor of the engrossment and third reading of the bill, as their names are called, will answer "yea;" those opposed will answer "nay;" those not voting will answer "present;" and the Sergeant-at-Arms will bring in the absentees. The Clerk will call the roll. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 44, answered "present" 28, not voting 185, as follows:

YEAS—125.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. WANGER with Mr. ADAMSON.

Mr. CURRIER with Mr. FINLEY.

On this vote:

Mr. MURPHY with Mr. LLOYD.

Mr. ESCH with Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

Mr. TAWNEY with Mr. MANN.

Mr. GILBERT of Indiana with Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the engrossed bill.

The engrossed bill was read in full by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will reopen the doors. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point of order that that is dilatory.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, that is a dilatory motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, it is fifteen minutes after the usual time to adjourn. How gentlemen can possibly say there is anything dilatory about a motion to adjourn at this time I do not understand.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion is dilatory.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Chair means to say that the House is dilatory in adjourning?

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman is dilatory in making the motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I admit that I make it fifteen minutes too late for the usual motion, if that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the Chair really going to hold that the motion to adjourn is dilatory?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At this hour?

The SPEAKER. Yes. As many as favor the passage of the bill will say "aye," those opposed "no." The ayes seem to have it——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division!

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Oh, the Chair did not understand the gentleman. A division is demanded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is not dilatory, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 148, noes 38.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 124, nays 40, answered "present" 29, not voting 189, as follows:

YEAS—124.

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:
For the balance of the day:
Mr. ALLEN of New Jersey with Mr. FITZGERALD.
Mr. COLE with Mr. AIKEN.
Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS with Mr. JONES of Virginia.
On this vote:
Mr. TAWNEY with Mr. MANN; Mr. TAWNEY in favor, Mr. MANN against.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.
The Clerk called the name of Mr. CANNON, and he answered "present," as above recorded.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote from "no" to "aye."
The Clerk called the name of Mr. WILLIAMS, and he answered "yea," as above recorded.
The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.
The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment of the title.
The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 146, noes 37.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point that no quorum is present.
The SPEAKER. The doors will be closed, and the Sergeant-at-Arms will bring in absentees. The Clerk will call the roll. All those in favor of amending the title will, as their names are called, answer "aye," and those opposed answer "no," and those not voting who are present will answer "present."
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 35, answered "present" 30, not voting 189, as follows:

So the motion to amend the title was agreed to.
During the calling of the roll the following occurred:
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it in order now to move that the House adjourn?
The SPEAKER. It is not during the roll call.
Mr. WILLIAMS. But the roll call has not yet started.
The SPEAKER. One name has been called, and the Clerk will continue.
The Clerk proceeded and completed the roll call.
The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:
Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts with Mr. MCNARY.
Mr. BEDE with Mr. GRIGGS.
Mr. WILLIAMS rose.
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of moving that the House do now adjourn, but before putting that motion I would like to direct a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair. The title having been perfected, would it be in order now to move to strike out the title?
The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair not. In the opinion of the Chair, while the question has not arisen for decision, it would not be in order, the previous question having been ordered and operating.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought I would wait until after the title was perfected by amendment. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that the House do now adjourn.
Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, upon that I raise the point of order that the motion is dilatory.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, it is now a quarter past 6 o'clock. The last time I made that motion it was a quarter past 5 o'clock.
The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to submit the motion to the House, but under the rule it requires a majority to second that motion before it can be put to the House, and that majority is to be ascertained by a rising vote, being counted by the Chair. As many as are in favor of seconding the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Fifty-four gentlemen have arisen. Those opposed to seconding the motion will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-seven gentlemen have arisen.
So the motion to adjourn was not seconded.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Has a quorum been announced?
Mr. KEIFER. It is not necessary on this.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I know; but on the other vote.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman for his information that the House is eight short of a quorum, and the Sergeant-at-Arms is attempting to bring in Members under the rule, and on the motion to adjourn a second has been refused, and here we are. [Laughter and applause.]
Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent in reference to a vote which I cast on the first roll call, if the House will permit me.
The SPEAKER. It would hardly be in order at this time. The gentleman can hardly interrupt a roll call.
Mr. BARTLETT. I thought the roll call was finished.
The SPEAKER. We are trying to ascertain whether there is a quorum. The House can do no business until that is disposed of. The Chair will be glad to recognize the gentleman when a quorum is ascertained.

After an interval,

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a quarter of one hour, lacking two and a half minutes, having passed, I would like to renew the motion that the House do now adjourn. Perhaps it has changed its mind.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that the motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. No business has intervened since the gentleman did move to adjourn, which motion failed even to get a second. The Chair will state to the gentleman we seem to be four short of a quorum, and the Sergeant-at-Arms reports that he is hustling. The suggestion of the lapse of fifteen minutes by way of a motion it seems to the Chair is dilatory, and the Chair would be so inclined to hold. [After an interval.] Upon this vote the yeas are 128, the nays 35, present 29—a quorum. The ayes have it.

Mr. MILLER. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can enter his motion tomorrow, if he chooses to do it, under the rules.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know; but I wanted to get some information from the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can hardly interrupt the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon (at 7 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting record of certain judgments rendered by the Court of Claims against the United States—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of appropriation for land and building for subtreasury at San Francisco—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting papers in the claim of John N. Newkirk—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ALEXANDER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19150) to change and fix the time for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the middle district of Tennessee, in the southern division of the eastern district of Tennessee at Chattanooga, and the northeastern division of the eastern district of Tennessee at Greeneville, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4266); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19374) to prohibit shanghaiing in the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4267); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ALEXANDER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3433) to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the judicial district of North Dakota," approved April 26, 1890, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4269); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17455) permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Clearwater, Wright County, Minn., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4270); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17758) permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River, in the county of Morrison, State of Minnesota, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4271); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17881) permitting the building of a dam across the Crow Wing River between the counties of Morrison and Cass, State of Minnesota, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4272); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5357) permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River above the village of Monticello, Wright County, Minn., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4273); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 13300, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 19473) authorizing the use of the waters in Coosa River at Lock 4, in Alabama, accompanied by a report (No. 4275); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. YOUNG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18900) correcting the military record of E. J. Kolb, alias E. J. Kulb, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4265); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. PRINCE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1211) to correct the military record of John Alspaugh, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4268); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. YOUNG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13836) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Tyler Weare, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4274); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2, Rule XIII, adverse reports were delivered to the Clerk, and laid on the table, as follows:

Mr. ALEXANDER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10135) to provide for an additional judge for the northern district of California, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 4264); which said bill and report were ordered laid on the table.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 19, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, the Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Journal be approved.

The motion was agreed to.

REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up conference report on the bill (H. R. 10129) to amend section 5501 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, this report has been pending a long time, and I think it should be disposed of; therefore, I am willing to have it brought up. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] has been interested in this bill. Temporarily he is out of the city. Now, I would ask the gentleman if he can not let the matter which was before the House last night be disposed of, and let this go over with the understanding that he will immediately call it up, so that we may dispose of this report to-day? I prefer to have the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] present. He has been here in attendance, but happens just now not to be in the House. In any event, we can dispose of it to-day.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] to reply to the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL].

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I have no objection whatever to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] being present when this matter is disposed of, but as the gentleman from Massachusetts knows and understands, we have postponed this matter time and time again, and I am anxious to have it disposed of. If we can have an understanding that immediately after this other matter is disposed of——

Mr. McCALL. I agree with everything the gentleman has said, and I agree to that.

Mr. BURLESON. But, as I understand it, the gentleman from Massachusetts and I can not make that agreement. There must be a third party to it.

Mr. McCALL. Well, let it be understood that the chairman of the committee is to call it up immediately after the matter before the House last evening is disposed of.

Mr. BURLESON. If that meets the approbation of the Speaker and the gentleman from Wisconsin, I have no objection whatever; but I do want the matter disposed of.

Mr. PAYNE. This is a privileged matter that can be called up at any time.

The SPEAKER. A conference report is a matter of the highest privilege.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a very important measure, and I think there ought to be some little time devoted to its consideration. This is a criminal law, and it seems to me open to some very serious criticisms. The code reported by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws contains a section covering this particular question, and if that be acted upon at this session, why, I do not know that anything can be gained by considering both propositions. But I certainly will oppose agreeing to the conference report. I think there ought to be a little time for its consideration, because it violates, it seems to me, all the principles of criminal legislation.

Mr. JENKINS. I withdraw the request for present consideration of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the conference report.

ESTATE OF SAMUEL LEE, DECEASED.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the last vote taken last night, and also move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair understand. The last vote taken covers the title. The vote taken prior to that covers the passage of the bill. Which vote does the gentleman desire to reconsider—the one passing the bill?

Mr. MILLER. The one passing the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to reconsider——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Would it be in order, the title of the bill having been perfected, to move to strike out the title?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The gentleman from Kansas moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moves to lay that motion on the table.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 99, noes 65.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No quorum present, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The doors will be closed; the Sergeant-at-Arms will bring in the absentees; as many as are in favor of the motion to lay on the table will, as their names are called, vote "yea;" those opposed will vote "nay;" those present and not voting will answer "present;" and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 59, answered "present" 32, not voting 159, as follows:

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no," and I desire to change my vote to "present," being paired.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will cause the doors to be opened.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to reconsider the vote whereby the title of the bill was amended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the title was adopted.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order——

Mr. PAYNE. That the motion comes too late.

Mr. MILLER. That the motion comes too late, the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed having been laid on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to be heard on that just for two minutes. The vote on the passage of the bill was taken before the vote on the amendment to the title.

Mr. MILLER. I make the further point also that it is dilatory.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The vote on the passage of the bill having been taken before the vote on the amendment to the title, naturally the motion to reconsider the vote amending the title also follows the motion to reconsider the vote upon the passage. Now, as to being dilatory, Mr. Speaker, I would challenge any human intelligence to find the means whereby it could be decided that it was not dilatory to move to reconsider upon the passage and is dilatory immediately afterward to move to reconsider the vote whereby the title was amended.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to inquire, Mr. Speaker, which way the gentleman voted on the question when it was taken?

Mr. WILLIAMS. "The gentleman from Mississippi" voted to amend the title. The gentleman purposely voted that way so that he might make this motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman voted in the affirmative.

The Chair is prepared to rule. The House will notice from the Journal, as well as the recollection of Members, the votes that were taken on this bill upon yesterday. There were one or more amendments to the bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House. Those amendments were agreed to by the House. The bill was engrossed and read a third time and passed, and then there was a vote upon amending the title. Then the House adjourned. This morning a motion was made to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and we have just voted upon a motion to lay that motion upon the table, and the House has agreed to the motion by a majority. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi that it does seem to the Chair that, all things considered, the Chair, in ruling upon the point of order that the motion is dilatory, must sustain the point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Would the Chair be willing to attempt to draw any distinction in the matter of dilatoriness between this motion and the one which just preceded it?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The Chair would be willing to do that without in the least impugning the motives of any Member. The Chair does not consider that that would be his province, and if it were he would have no judgment that would prompt him to do it. But the Chair, upon the whole, would be willing to put the question, as he did yesterday, to the gentleman from Mississippi himself if he does not think it is dilatory.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi was interrogating the Chair and would like to have an answer to the question he put to the Chair, and after that the gentleman from Mississippi would stand interrogation himself, but not now. Now, what I am asking is this: Whether the Chair would be willing to undertake to show wherein this motion is any more dilatory than the one which just preceded it, and after the Chair has answered that the gentleman from Mississippi will stand all sorts of interrogation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state further in reply to the gentleman that the vote by which the bill was passed was the material vote, the substantial vote, and a motion to reconsider that vote was made and that motion was laid on the table. The question of amending the title may be likened to the "leather and prunella" that surround many questions, and the Chair must adhere to its decision and sustain the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand that the decision of the Chair is based upon the "leather-and-prunella" theory?

The SPEAKER. Yes and no. "For the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." The House has had an opportunity to consider this bill on its merits and substantially on the motion to reconsider the vote by which it passed. [Applause on the Republican side.]

AMENDING SECTION 5501, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill (H. R. 10129) to amend section 5501 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10129) to amend section 5501 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 6, 9, and 10.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 11, and 12, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 2, line 14, after the word "thereof," insert: "and every Member of Congress;" and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT OF THE MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE.

The Senate amended the bill as follows:

(1) Page 1, line 6, by striking out the words "or employee."

(2) Page 1, line 10, by striking out the word "such."

(3) Page 2, line 9, after the word "not," by inserting the words "less than one year nor."

(4) Page 2, line 10, by striking out the word "shall" and inserting the words "may, in addition."

(5) Page, 2, line 10, by striking out the words "to exceed" and inserting the words "less than five hundred dollars, nor more than."

(6) Page 2, line 11, by striking out the words "or employee."

(7) Page 2, line 13, after the word "of," by inserting the words "the authority of."

(8) Page 2, line 14, after the word "government," by inserting the word "thereof."

(9) Page 2, lines 14 and 15, by striking out the words "by virtue of the" and inserting the words "while holding said."

(10) Page 2, line 20, after the word "company," by inserting the words "and which information is required by law or under the rules of any department of the Government to be withheld from publication until a fixed time."

(11) Page 2, line 24, after the word "not," by inserting the words "less than five hundred dollars nor."

(12) Page 3, line 1, after the word "not," by inserting the words "less than one year nor."

The following Senate amendments were agreed to: Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 11, and 12.

The Senate receded from its amendments Nos. 1, 6, 9, and 10.

The House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 8, and by authority conferred by Senate concurrent resolution No. 23 agreed to the amendment of the Senate No. 8 with an amendment, as follows:

On page 2, line 14, after the word "thereof," by inserting "and every Member of Congress;" and the Senate agreed to the same.

JOHN J. JENKINS,
C. E. LITTLEFIELD,
H. D. CLAYTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, there is some opposition to the adoption of this report this morning, and I will make a very brief statement for the information of the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman if this bill can be read to the House as it will be after the conference report is agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS. I will ask that the bill be read in my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McCALL. Perhaps the gentleman from Wisconsin did not understand the question of the gentleman from Ohio. The question of the gentleman from Ohio was that the bill be read as it will read after the conference report is adopted. Is there any print of the bill that would give it precisely as it would be after the adoption of the report, so that the bill as amended can be read to the House?

Mr. JENKINS. I am ready to have the bill read in my time.

Mr. McCALL. I understand there is no copy of the bill which incorporates these amendments. I am trying to find out how it will read by putting in the amendments at the points suggested by the report, but I have been unable to do it. I do not believe it can be told just how the bill will read.

Mr. JENKINS. I will say that we did not have any difficulty in harmonizing it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say in answer to the question put by the gentleman from Massachusetts that in a short time, if it is desired, the Clerk will be able to give the bill as it will read upon the adoption of the conference report. It will take a little time, however, to do it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Would not the chairman of the committee be willing that the bill should be printed in the RECORD and let this question lie over for a day or two? This is a very important piece of legislation.

Mr. JENKINS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, that would require unanimous consent, and I object to it; not because I have any desire or am disposed to keep any Member of the House from knowing what is in the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The conference report can be withdrawn by the chairman of the committee. You are creating a lot of penitentiary offenses and Congressmen are asked to vote for them without knowing what they are.

Mr. BURLESON. I am trying to do it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There are not one-tenth of the Members of this House that know what is in this bill.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I will say that this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]. It was carefully considered by the Committee on the Judiciary and amended and reported to the House, and this House concurred in the amendments and the bill was passed by the House. After the bill reached the Senate it was several times amended and the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate, and asked for a conference. That request was agreed to, and the conference committee met when they were presented with this simple question, that the bill provided that every officer and employee of the United States while holding office or position was forbidden to give out information as to the products grown in the United States that would affect the market value of United States bonds or bonds and stocks of any incorporated company. That included the President of the United States and included every officer and every employee of the Government down to the charman and the charwoman in every department of this Government, and the smallest page boy on the floor of this House. In the conference committee it was suggested that it certainly would only be fair to include Members of Congress. It was a debatable proposition whether it should or should not and whether or not the conferees had the power to make the necessary change. The House conferees took the position that they could not without instructions from the House incorporate the amendment "and every Member of Congress," and after some consideration a concurrent resolution was presented in the Senate authorizing the committee on conference to include as an amendment "and every Member of Congress." That resolution passed the Senate unanimously and was brought into this House and was adopted, so the committee on conference was instructed to include the words "and every Member of Congress.' There was no opposition to the adoption of the resolution in the House.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] asked for a statement with reference to it, and having the floor I yielded to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], who was interested in the measure, to make the necessary statement for the information of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], and the gentleman from Iowa said, as the RECORD discloses, that the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] was satisfactory to him, and therefore the House in that way became possessed of all the knowledge and information that the committee of conference had. The committee of conference did include in their report the words "and every Member of Congress," and when that committee sought to have the report considered in the House some gentleman raised the question here as to whether it was fair and just and proper to include Members of Congress, and in deference to that question the committee has held back until this morning the consideration of the conference report. I say it was a very serious proposition as presented to the conference committee whether or not it should include every officer and every employee of the Government, from the highest to the lowest, and exclude Members of Congress.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I have read the bill through with some degree of care, and I would have no objection personally, of course, to the inclusion of Members of Congress if it reached the proper question. The bill as it was agreed upon by the conference committee does not make it a crime for Members of Congress to speculate upon products or stocks and bonds which may be influenced by legislation, does it?

Mr. JENKINS. Why, the gentleman can draw his own conclusions. I am simply stating the facts.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But the gentleman has charge of the matter. I have never seen the bill as it was agreed upon. Does it reach the Members of Congress who may speculate on the boards of trade and cotton and stock exchanges of the country, on commodities the price of which may be influenced by legislation?

Mr. JENKINS. I should say, unhesitatingly, no. Some gentlemen have feared that some Members of Congress might be caught in the net and punished for giving out information. I am satisfied, as far as I am concerned, that there is nothing here that any Member of Congress need fear. The Senate of the United States has unanimously agreed to this proposition, and the question now, Mr. Speaker, is presented to this House to know whether or not it proposes to exclude Members of Congress and include every other officer and employee of the Government.

I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] fifteen minutes.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman that fifteen minutes is not sufficient time to discuss a bill that affects the whole fabric and efficiency of the Government of the United States.

Mr. JENKINS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may be recognized for thirty minutes, without taking that time out of my time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, let us have an hour on a side.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be recognized in my own right. The gentleman can reserve his time.

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman for fifteen minutes, if he wants that time now.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] may be given an hour. He asked for that time.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is not moved, and if the gentleman from Wisconsin yields the floor the gentleman would then receive recognition if he desired it.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield the floor?

Mr. JENKINS. No; I simply yield to the gentleman for fifteen minutes. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts want the time now?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield for a question? At what point in this bill, the printed bill which Members have, does this amendment fall? There is nothing in the printed bill which shows it.

Mr. JENKINS. There is nothing in the printed bill. It is in the statement.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am asking the gentleman on what page and line.

Mr. JENKINS. Page 2, line 14.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman read in the bill the language of the amendment?

Mr. JENKINS. The amendment occurs on page 2, line 14.

Mr. OVERSTREET. At what place in line 14 and after what word?

Mr. JENKINS. After the word "thereof."

Mr. OVERSTREET. After what?

Mr. JENKINS. After the word "thereof."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Why, there is no such word in that line.

Mr. JENKINS. Well, that is a Senate amendment.

Mr GROSVENOR. Well, it can be voted down, and that is the best way to dispose of it if they will not let us know what is in it.

Mr. BURLESON. With the permission of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I can tell the gentleman what is in it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to read it; I do not want to vote for a penitentiary offense without reading it.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not think there is anything menacing anybody——

Mr. OVERSTREET. The House is entitled to know what is in it, and that is what I am trying to ascertain.

Mr. JENKINS. I claim my right to the floor. Now, I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he wants fifteen minutes?

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, it is hardly in accordance with the gentleman's usual fairness to ask that a proposition of this kind be discussed in his one hour of time, and I would suggest to the gentleman that he remain in charge of the measure and that he permit me to be recognized in my own right, and reserve his time. I do not propose to talk an hour on the matter—perhaps not over fifteen minutes—but there are gentlemen who desire to give their views to the House with regard to this bill. Now, if the gentleman will permit me to ask unanimous consent——

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given an hour in his own right. I submitted the request a moment ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts at this time be entitled to an hour. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, this is an exceedingly important bill. I think it affects the efficiency of all the departments of the Government more than any bill which has been presented during my term of service. I only discovered it by mere accident, happening to be in the House when the conference report was brought in, and I venture to say that there are not five members of either House who understand just what it means. I do not believe that even the Judiciary Committee have considered its different aspects. It was introduced, I will say, by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]. It was favorably reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. It appears that the cause that led the gentleman to introduce the bill was the divulging of certain so-called "cotton statistics" collected by the Department of Agriculture. The genesis of the bill illustrates strikingly how penal laws are often made. Here was a distinct evil, something to which legislation should be directed, and the bill that is presented here attempts to accomplish the ideal perfection of the universe and to deal with all the departments of the Government.

I submit that the bill goes vastly beyond what the evil which it is claimed justified the bill would warrant or sanction. The bill exhibts, if gentlemen will read it, a good deal of refinement. It is attempting to do a difficult thing. It is a difficult thing, and it should be a difficult thing, in a Government like ours to keep the lid on any secret information or secret statistics; and I venture to say that the original bill in the form in which it passed both Houses ought never to become a law, and I do not believe it will ever become a law if the Members of this House shall study it. It applies to every officer of the Government from the President down. It applies to the giving of any information, the broadest kind of a term possible, of governmental information which would tend to affect values of certain specified forms of property which comprehend nearly all of the property of the United States except land.

Now, when we remember that the executive officers are constantly applied to by the members of the press representing the public who desire to get information upon all sorts of matters, when we remember that nearly all governmental information will affect values, information at the Treasury Department, at the Census Department, at the Department of Justice with reference to proposed prosecutions, information as to what a Presidential message is to contain, and a multitude of other things, and when you provide that any officer of the Government who gives information of that sort which may tend to affect all these values gives it at the peril of his liberty, I think you will see that you are attempting to accomplish a very far-reaching thing, and that the only safety for any executive officer would be to become a mere clam and not tell anything whatever concerning his Department. And we may have a President, too, some day who will delight to say things as well as to "do things," and if he is indiscreet and gives information about what his message is going to contain in advance of its being transmitted to Congress he will come near committing a crime under this bill.

And not merely that, but the penalty is absolutely heathenish. This idea had not been put forth since the foundation of the Government—the enactment of a bill like this—and yet the committee that reports this bill thinks this idea has such great consequence and importance and is so greatly enamored with it that the least invasion of it is to be punished by a year in the penitentiary. That is the minimum penalty. An officer might be indiscreet, he might not understand what the rules of the Department were, he might make a mere technical infraction of this statute, and yet the minimum penalty would be a year in the penitentiary. I doubt if any Member of this House will vote for such an absurd and heathenish minimum penalty as that.

Then again, it is made a crime for any officer to give information in advance of the time when it should be given by law or contrary to the "rules of the Department." In other words, one thing may be criminal under the rule established by the chief of a bureau to-day and another thing be criminal to-morrow. You practically delegate to the bureau chief the authority to pass a penal statute. I think that the original bill as it is presented here for consideration is a bad bill, and for the purpose of arresting its progress I believe, if for no other reason, this report should be returned to the conference committee in order that they may, if possible, perfect the bill, and if they can not perfect it, then that they may provide for killing it.

Now, what I have said has application to the original bill. What I shall say now applies to the amendment, so far as Members of Congress are concerned. And the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] has given the only reason under the sun why this bill should apply to Members of Congress. The reason amounts simply to this, that it is to complete and make perfect the exquisite absurdity of an absurd bill. There is no original reason given why there should be legislation comprehending Members of Congress; but you take now the standard created by this bill which you have not passed and say, "Oh, well, if we are to have a measure applying to the President, and to the scrub women, and to the clerks, of course Members of Congress should be included." So that, as I have said, it is only to perfect and make complete the absurdity of the bill that you propose to include Members of Congress. I should like to have some original reason given here why Members of Congress should pass this slur upon themselves. If we legislate that our virtue needs to be protected thus by law, we certainly do cast a slur upon ourselves, and if we do not need the protection, then we are passing a bill which practically amounts to an advertisement to this effect, namely, that we are so good that we are willing to pass even so absurd a bill as this against ourselves and against our successors.

Mr. McGAVIN. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he does not think even under the language of the original bill here the term "officers of the Government" would necessarily include Members of Congress?

Mr. McCALL. I think it does not. I think it has been held that a Member of Congress is not an officer of the Government.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCALL. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. What effect would the gentleman construe the word "willful" to have where it is used in the bill? Would that in any measure modify the gentleman's construction of the bill generally? I can not see where "willfully" would either add or detract.

Mr. McCALL. I do not think it would have any particular effect. It would have, perhaps, as against something that was purely accidental.

Mr. OLMSTED. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. McCALL. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I see that as the bill now stands we would not be permitted to impart any information which would tend to exert an influence upon the market of any product grown in the United States. If we should see a conflagration about breaking out in a large warehouse filled with cotton or oil or wheat, the destruction of which might "tend to exert an influence on the market," would it be, under this bill, safe for a Government clerk or a Member of Congress to cry "fire?" [Laughter.]

Mr. McCALL. I will say to the gentleman that the first section does not apply to Members of Congress. It is only proposed to have it apply to executive officers.

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania acquired that information about the conflagration by virtue of his official position, then it might be a violation of the law, but if he did not acquire it by virtue of the official position he held, it could not possibly be so construed.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] a question in the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL]?

Mr. McCALL. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. It is in the thirteenth line, second section. It says:

> Every officer or employee of the United States and every person acting for or one behalf of the United States in any official capacity under or by virtue of the authority of any Department or office of the Government thereof who shall by virtue of the office or the position held by him, etc.

Mr. KEIFER. Is that in the bill now?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly it is in the bill now.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is not in the copy of the bill I have.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not know what the gentleman has, but I am talking about the bill as agreed upon by the conferees.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have not been able to find out what that is.

Mr. LILLEY of Pennsylvania. Would it not be well to accept the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, to let this bill be printed somewhere, so that we can know what it is.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I guess we can defeat it now as well as we can after it is printed. If the gentleman wants us to vote on a bill we never saw, let him try that.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I was trying to discover some original reason why a measure of this kind should be enacted in regard to Members of Congress—any reason other than that it would be in harmony with this absurd bill. Now, what secret and confidential information do Members of Congress have? We have investigations; but those investigations are always public.

The Senate, to be sure, has executive sessions; but when anything of importance happens at an executive session it is reported as accurately and as promptly as the report of what is done at the public sessions. We have absolutely no secret information. If the Executive Departments of the Government are made the custodians of secret statistics, possibly it might be well to pass some carefully framed and guarded statute that would prevent a member of the executive department dealing with these particular statistics from divulging them. But Members of Congress have no such information; all that we collect is public. And I venture to say, so far as speculation is concerned, if both Houses of Congress should be assembled in joint convention and we should pool all our so-called "secret information," arm some one with it, and send him forth to Wall street and back him with our means that we would all be bankrupt. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, this proposition as it has been amended to include Members of Congress is bad for another reason. The two Houses of Congress are given power under the Constitution to try the President, to try judges, to try all the officers of the Government, and we are made the judges of the qualifications of our own Members. It is our prerogative and our duty to punish and even expel Members if their character and deportment shall not accord with, not the arbitrary requirements of a penal statute, but the broad requirements of conscience and rules of best conduct.

We have that jurisdiction; and I submit that this is an invasion of our prerogative for us to subject Members of Congress now and in the future for the manner in which they conduct themselves in their office to the jurisdiction of the other department.

Now, why does not the gentleman from Texas make his code complete while he is about it? If it is good to have a provision here that this shall be criminal for a Member of Congress, why does he not take him out of the hands of the House entirely and provide that if a Member shall fail to vote—and that is a most important thing—that he shall be taken into the police court and fined; if he shall absent himself from his duties here, that he shall be imprisoned; and if the Speaker of the House shall play the part of a czar, he shall be subject to be flogged at the cart's tail in the public square? [Laughter.]

Why does not the gentleman perfect his bill upon these lines? The obvious answer is that the Houses are entirely competent to purge their own membership. It is their primary duty. Then, if members of our committees collect information and use it improperly, it is the duty of the House, a duty the House will exercise when the infraction is brought to its attention, to hold that Member to a high rule of legislative conduct, and in a proper case to inflict that gravest of all punishments, expulsion.

Now, the Constitution thought so much of the right of representation here that it exempted Members from arrest in going to or returning from the sessions of the House; and yet we have witnessed this winter the spectacle in this House, for something that was alleged to have been done in his office, over which the House had complete jurisdiction, of a Member being taken from this House, his constituents deprived of their representation very nearly all winter, and, finally, when the case was presented in the court, one of the ablest judges on the bench held that there was not even evidence to warrant the case being sent to the jury. [Loud applause.]

I do not care to aid in setting any statutory traps or in spreading a net for the feet of men who may come here after us, men who may never know of this penal statute which you propose to enact.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. McCALL. In a moment. Now, I do not know whether the prosecution I have referred to was due to political animosity as charged or not; but I do know, when you take into consideration the character of the office we hold, that we are liable to excite antagonisms, and by passing this bill you are furnishing hate and partisanship with an ideal weapon for gratifying animosity.

Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Does anybody in the House know where this conference report was printed?

Mr. McCALL. Possibly the members of the Judiciary Committee do.

Mr. MANN. I have made inquiry of several Members, including the gentleman who introduced the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is in so many different pieces that you could not tell if you knew where it was, unless you could get it printed in the form of a consecutive bill.

Mr. MANN. Of course a conference report must be printed in some place as a whole.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know anything about it. I have got enough of it so that I understand all I care to about it.

Mr. MANN. Under the rules of the House a conference report must be printed.

Mr. BURLESON. It certainly was printed. I am unable to state the page of the RECORD upon which it is to be found.

Mr. MANN. It seems remarkable that the House can not obtain information as to the matter upon which it is called upon to vote.

Mr. PAYNE. It would seem a little remarkable that the conferees could not tell where it was printed.

Mr. McCALL. I am not claiming that Members of Congress should have immunity. They are subject to precisely the same statutes that apply to all of the people of this country, but in addition to that they are subject to the jurisdiction of the Houses of which they are members for the manner in which they conduct themselves in their office, and if the representatives of the States and of the people can not be trusted, if the Houses can not keep their membership pure and can not exact proper conduct, then I submit we had better change the Constitution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Members come here from all sorts of occupations. They come from among the people, from the professions, from trades, from the farm, from all sorts of business, and it is well that they should have a practical stake in the country. I do not believe that we should encourage the filling of seats in this body by men who have never made any industrial contribution to the welfare of the country, and who regard all questions that come up from the standpoint of the mere theorist and the talker. In one of the two years of a Congressional term we are at home nine months, and engaged in the business that we follow, and in the other year we are at home six months. Yet you subject a Member to this difficulty. The bill does not say that some particular, definite thing shall be a crime, but it says that if he shall have any information by virtue of his office—and what is that? Will somebody tell me exactly how a Member has information by virtue of his office?—that may tend to affect practically the value of any kind of property in the country, and he shall see fit to exercise a reasonable degree of commercial freedom and buy and sell, he subjects himself to having somebody say he had some valuable public information, and must therefore be dragged into a criminal court. I say the crime you are creating is too indefinite, and that if you want to encourage filling this Chamber, not with active men with red blood in their veins, but with patriots of the gum-shoe breed, mere ciphers, whose footfalls you will never hear, who are always ready to stand behind somebody who may at the time be playing all the rôles of government, then you had better pass just such a bill as this. But this will not make Congress more attractive to honest men.

Mr. Speaker, we do not know how far it may be in the future, in view of the developments we have had, when we shall have the State trial and the spectacular and bizarre prosecution, when a man will be followed in the criminal courts, not because he is guilty, but because for political reasons or to enhance the popularity of somebody or for some so-called State purpose a human victim is demanded. I submit that this bill would at some future time subject men actively in politics to the State trial and to the sort of prosecution I have described.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the Executive sometimes exercises discretion in initiating prosecutions, and this bill would, in an emergency, greatly augment executive influence over Congress. The Executive is naturally impressed with the virtue of the men who are immediately about him, men in high executive office, who have his confidence. I may be permitted to refer to the case of Mr. Morton to support that statement. I am far from regarding Mr. Morton as an enormity of wickedness. I believe he is an able man and an honest man, but Mr. Morton should have been permitted to go to the courts. Two eminent doctors selected by the Administration prescribed the courts, and yet we saw him regenerated and made whole by the course of treatment which he took at the immunity baths. [Laughter.]

It is natural for the Executive to regard with favor the officers immediately about him, and he is sometimes apt to look with caution and suspicion upon those who are in the outlying provinces of the Government. For instance, there was the message which we had some time ago with reference to an officer who at the time was acting under all the sanctions which surround the judiciary, a great coordinate department of the Government.

The one deplorable thing in the other republics on this hemisphere is that their constitutions are thrown out of balance, that they have executive government, and that especially the judiciary often decides great questions affecting the lives, liberty, and property of citizens practically under his inspiration. The preservation of liberty, such as we have had in this country, requires that the three departments shall be kept rigidly separate. I believe, sir, in that settled and ordered government, which we have had heretofore, where the legislature legislates, the executive executes, and unawed judges constitute for the citizen the sure palladium of his rights. [Applause.]

I do not care to put any such weapon as this in the hands of the Executive. And because, sir, I believe that there is absolutely no ground in fact for this amendment, because I believe that the original bill in its present form is absolutely vicious and should be defeated, and because I believe that it will tend to a government for the Executive, of the Executive, and by the Executive, I will vote against adopting this conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty-five minutes.

Mr. McCALL. I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CLAYTON. Before the gentleman yields to the gentleman from Indiana, I would like to make a statement for the information of the House.

Mr. McCALL. I am always ready to yield to the gentleman. I have been insisting that the gentleman in charge of this report should give the time to have it properly debated. If the gentleman from Alabama will permit me, I will yield——

Mr. CLAYTON. I only want one minute to give the House the information which it asked for. On page 5540 of the RECORD of April 17 Members will find the conference report about which inquiries have been made, setting forth how it is proposed to amend the bill.

Mr. McCALL. I will say that I diligently attempted, with a copy of the bill which I had, to find where the changes came in, and I could not find the places. Now, I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree with the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr McCALL] in the very able criticism he has made of this measure. This is an exceptionally important bill. It provides penalties for certain acts on the part of Federal officials which are not now unlawful, the lowest of which is imprisonment in the penitentiary for one year. Now, I conceive it to be one of the very first requisites of wise criminal legislation that it shall define the offense clearly and plainly, so there can be no doubt or uncertainty about what is prohibited. I undertake to say that no man in this country can read the first section of this bill through and say what he can do and what he can not do in relation to the matters mentioned with any degree of safety. The first and fundamental principle of penal legislation is that the criminal act shall be so plainly stated that the ordinary citizen may be able to take the public statutes and read for himself the things that are forbidden under serious penalties like this bill imposes. There is no lawyer, no judge, in the country that can take this bill and say what particular act is made criminal and what not.

The first section provides that—

Every officer of the United States and every person acting for or on behalf of the United States in any official capacity under or by virtue of the authority of any Department or office of the Government, who shall, while holding said office or position, become possessed of any information which would tend to exert an influence upon or affect the market value of any product grown within the United States.

Now, how many of the Members of this House are able to say what information would tend to affect the market price of products or corporation stocks or bonds of the United States? Information that might seriously affect the market price of commodities this week might have no effect on markets at all three weeks hence. Everybody knows that these questions are so entirely speculative, so altogether uncertain, that, with due regard for the liberties of citizens, they should not be made the basis of penal legislation. The gentleman from Texas said that the information must come to the officer or employee "by virtue of his office" in order to make its communication unlawful. I have the bill as it was originally prepared and there is no such requirement in it; I have a copy of the bill as it was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary and there is no such requirement in it; I have a copy of the bill as it was passed by the House of Representatives and it contains no such provision. If there is any provision of that kind in the bill, I have been unable to find it.

Mr. BURLESON. I did not catch what provision the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That the communication of information in order to be criminal must come to the person by virtue of his office. There is no such provision as that in the bill and there never was.

Mr. HOAR. It is struck out on the seventeenth line of the second page.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It was perhaps in the bill at one time, but it is out of the bill now.

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is out of the bill as it came from conference.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me, it is a thousand times worse now, because it now provides if the information comes to him at all under any circumstances while holding the office.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the point I am making exactly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I can give him the exact language of the bill as provided in the conference report on that point.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will be very glad to hear it. I have never been able to know what it is.

Mr. MANN. It is in section 2:

Every officer or employee of the Government of the United States and every person acting for or on behalf of the United States in any official capacity, under or by virtue of the authority of any Department of the Government, and every Member of Congress who shall, by virtue of the office or position held by him——

Mr. KEIFER. That is only descriptive of the person.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That may be a later print.

Mr. BURLESON. That is right.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am not talking about the latest print. I am talking about the way the bill would read as a law if the conference report were adopted.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] presents what he says to be the final revision of the bill. I am not able to determine whether it is or not. I have three or four different prints before me, no two of which are alike; but suppose that be true, it does not change the character of the bill. It requires the citizen who is liable to be punished for crime under its provisions to judge for himself whether an item of information may tend to affect the markets of the country respecting produce, stocks, bonds, or the bonds and securities of the United States, and if he honestly makes a mistake he must go to prison. Furthermore, it puts every man in the service of the Government under the control of Department chiefs. These penalties and criminal acts depend upon departmental regulations. The information must be such as is condemned or authorized by a rule or regulation of a Department. I insist that the Congress of the United States can not abdicate its constitutional functions and turn over to any chief of a bureau or head of a Department the right to enact any kind of legislation, let alone criminal legislation which subjects the citizen to confinement in the penitentiaries of the land. It is a salutary requirement that Congress shall put into the laws of the country all of the criminal legislation that they are to contain. The bill provides further that the Department, by rule or regulation, shall say who may legally have the information and who may not have it.

The purpose of the bill, I understand, as explained by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL], is to prevent the divulgence of cotton estimates. It is the result of a practice the Government has gotten into that I am now about ready to condemn as a most abominable practice, that of becoming a sort of information bureau for grain and stock speculators and gamblers. If we, however, continue to gather estimates of crops, grain and cotton, I am willing to have a law enacted that will make it a crime for any public officer to divulge any information respecting those estimates or those statistics until they are ready to be given to the public. I believe if we continue in the business we ought to have that sort of statute, but we do not need a piece of legislation of this character, a piece of legislation that subjects men to punishment for acts that they can not possibly know in advance may be criminal. There is no necessity for passing this sort of a law to protect the cotton growers and speculators of the country against leakage in the cotton estimates. The second section provides penalties for speculation in stocks and produce upon certain kind of information, and it includes Members of Congress. Members of Congress have no right to speculate in the markets of the country—and the bill defines speculation to mean buying or selling—after they have received information that the rules of a department say shall not be made public. We are the lawmakers, and yet we turn over the power of making law to the Departments and authorize them to make laws to punish us, to impose penalties on Members of Congress. Think of the situation! This bill does not reach any practical abuse. I never heard of a Member of Congress getting any information wrongfully. He is a disseminator of information respecting government and administration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCALL. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I never knew a Member of Congress to be criticised for communicating or speculating upon information, the kind of information described by this bill, but I have heard and read complaints in the public press that Congressmen have sometimes speculated, and it is charged and sometimes believed that Members of Congress do sometimes speculate in commodities the market price of which may be influenced by pending legislation. I do not believe there is any truth in such complaints, but there is nothing in this bill that prohibits doing that at all. The bill does not pretend to cover that subject. We here propose tariff revision bills, we may propose bills of one kind and another, we may propose railroad rate bills, bills for the investigations of trusts and combinations that may materially affect the market price of stocks and bonds of one kind and another; and we are entirely at liberty, so far as this bill is concerned, to go on the market and speculate in the commodities so affected without let or hindrance. This bill prohibits the communication of information in any of the Departments until the head of the Department, by such rules and regulations as he may adopt, shall authorize it to be made public. And he may provide to whom it may be communicated and whom not. If any member of either branch of Congress should speculate upon the subject to which the information relates, he commits a felony, and the bill says that by speculation it is meant to buy and sell——

Mr. OLMSTED. Buy or sell.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Buy or sell. Now, my friend from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], the author of the bill, is a cotton farmer, and he may be able, and I have no doubt does, carry his cotton crop until the market suits him, and while he is here serving his country as a lawmaker he might get information which would lead him to think it is a good time to sell his cotton, yet if he acted upon that information, of course he would be subject to prosecution under this law, and if he were convicted he would have to go to the penitentiary.

Mr. BURLESON. Not at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The bill says it is a felony to buy or sell any commodity upon certain kind of information, and I insist it would apply to the gentleman in the sale of his cotton.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. HINSHAW. Members of Congress are constantly receiving letters from their constituents asking them for certain statistics from the Census Office, from the Agricultural Department, and various other Departments of the Government. Now, then, they either go in person or by letter to try and elicit the information from the various Departments. Suppose now, the clerk or head of the Department should report certain information which might be within the inhibition of this rule, and this Congressman should give it forth to his constituents, would he be liable under this bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He would be liable, and the only safe thing for a Congressman would be to inquire every morning of the heads of divisions and of bureaus what he can safely and properly say and do during the day and keep out of jail. [Laughter.] He would need to inquire what new rules the Department had made for the regulation of Members of Congress for that day, and then he could proceed with some sense of security. That would be the only safe thing for a Member to do.

Mr. FREDERICK LANDIS. We constantly get inquiries about the prospect of the passage of bills—for instance, the parcels-post bill. Would information in regard to such measures be a violation of the provisions of this bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think it would, because it is official information and might affect the value of stocks, railroad and express company stocks.

Mr. OLMSTED. What about the alcohol bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If this bill should pass, there would be dynamite in every bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And the pure-food bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This bill would put dynamite in everything. I think the proper course for the House to take is to defeat the conference report, and then refuse to go into conference upon the bill again, and thereby effectually put this measure to sleep. [Applause.]

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twenty minutes remaining.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin consume some of his time?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LILLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am wholly unable to obtain any copy of anything whatever that relates to the bill. Is there in the possession of the House information for Members as to what this conference report is, and would it be in order for the Clerk to report the conference report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk has a copy of the bill worked out as it will be if the conference report is adopted, and that bill when it comes to be read will be the one presented to the House. The gentleman from Wisconsin yields to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] has the floor.

Mr. LILLEY of Pennsylvania. Could we have that conference report reported to the House now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the House desires and there is no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. Do I understand that this is coming out of our time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No, sir.

Mr. LILLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk report the bill as agreed upon with the conferees.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I object to the reading of the conference report. It has been read once.

Mr. PAYNE. What the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LILLEY] is asking for is the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the Clerk has the bill, I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw his objection to that?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read. If gentlemen have a print of the Senate bill, they can follow the reading of the Clerk.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. I would like to know how the Clerk can tell how the bill will read as reported from the conference when the conferees reported that the House receded from Senate amendment No. 8 in one place and in another place report that they recede with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The intent of the report seems to be to concur in amendment 8 with an amendment, and the Clerk has been able to follow that intent.

Mr. MANN. So that the Speaker rejects that portion——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There seems to be some ambiguity——

Mr. MANN. So the Speaker rejects that portion of the conference report which says that the House receded from the Senate amendment numbered 8.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair believes that the intent of the report is plain, although there seems to be some technical difficulty. [Laughter.] The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5501 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended by adding thereto the following:

"SEC. 5501a. Every officer or employee of the United States and every person acting for or on behalf of the United States in any official capacity under or by virtue of the authority of any Department or office of the Government, who shall, while holding said office or position, become possessed of any information which would tend to exert an influence upon or affect the market value of any product grown within the United States, or which would tend to exert an influence upon or affect the market value of the bonds of the United States or the stocks or bonds of any incorporated company, which information is required by law or under the rules of any Department of the Government to be withheld from publication until a fixed time, and who shall willfully impart, either directly or indirectly, said information, or any part thereof, to any person not entitled under the law or rules of the Department of the Government to receive same, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than five years, and may, in addition, be fined in any sum not less than $500 nor more than $5,000.

"SEC. 5501b. Every officer or employee of the United States and every person acting for or on behalf of the United States in any official capacity under or by virtue of the authority of any Department or office of the Government thereof and every Member of Congress who shall, by virtue of the office or position held by him, become possessed of any information which would tend to exert an influence upon or affect the market value of any product grown within the United States, or which would tend to exert an influence upon or affect the market value of the bonds of the United States or the stocks or bonds of any incorporated company, and who shall, before said information is made public through regular official channels, either directly or indirectly, speculate in said product, stocks, or bonds, by selling or buying same in any quantity, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000 and may be imprisoned for not less than one year nor more than five years."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk has properly reported this bill just as agreed upon by the conferees. It is simple in its terms. No intelligent man can misunderstand its meaning, provided he wants to understand it.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. I have only a limited time as the gentleman knows and——

Mr. McCALL. I want to ask the gentleman one question on the phraseology of the bill.

Mr. BURLESON. I decline to yield, not from any disposition to refuse the gentleman information, but because I have only limited time, and there have been so many specious objections offered to this measure, so many misleading arguments urged against it, that I feel it will require all the time allotted me to answer them. I desire in the beginning to assure the membership of this body that there has been and is now absolutely no disposition upon my part to keep from it full information in reference to the purpose or the effect of the proposed bill. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] has said that he feels quite sure that there are not more than five Members of Congress, including both ends of this Capitol, who understand just what this measure means.

If the gentleman is correct about that, Mr. Speaker, am I responsible for it? This bill in the same terms, except as it applies to Members of Congress, passed this House by a unanimous vote. Practically the same measure, with a few unimportant amendments, passed the Senate of the United States by a unanimous vote. When the matters of difference between the two bodies were brought before the conference committee I appeared before the conferees and expressed the desire that the words "and every Member of Congress" should be inserted in the second section of the bill, my purpose being to embrace them within the terms of the bill. The conferees unanimously agreed that this should be done, the understanding being that when the effort was made a full statement should be made to each body. When this was done by the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee objection was made that it was a violation of the rule of the Senate. Then the matter was again brought before both bodies through a concurrent resolution, and passed each by a unanimous vote. Thus it is seen that five times this measure has passed by a unanimous vote before this and the other body, and yet Members stand here and have the effrontery, the temerity, to confess that a measure that has thus passed before the two bodies of the Congress is not understood by Members. I can not understand such an admission, and must confess my surprise that anyone could be found who would openly make it.

Mr. Speaker, before I begin to address myself to the reasons urged by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] why this conference report should not be aodpted, I wish briefly to state the circumstances which led up to the introduction of the bill and the reasons which prompted me to introduce it. Last summer a subordinate official in the Bureau of Statistics in the Agricultural Department betrayed the trust which had been reposed in him by the splendid official who heads that great Department. At first the rumor was current throughout this city that this subordinate had betrayed his trust, and finally publication of the fact was made in the papers that some one connected in an official way with the Bureau of Statistics was using for speculative purposes the statistical information relating to cotton which had been gathered by the Government through that Bureau.

When the publication of this charge was made the Secretary of Agriculture promptly set upon foot a sweeping investigation. Bringing to bear all the instrumentalities of his Department for the purpose, the Secretary of Agriculture, after an examination which was rigid, disclosed that one of the officials who had to do with the compiling of the cotton statistics had betrayed his trust. Immediately an outcry went up, first heard on the part of the cotton producers, that this official who had betrayed his trust should be punished. The cotton manufacturers echoed that demand, that this man who had proven unfaithful should be punished. The newspapers were insistent that this guilty official be brought to book; and finally the President—and inasmuch as the gentleman from Massachusetts has made allusion to that, I will allude to it—the President, who but recently had engaged in a vigorous "stunt" of whitewashing Mr. Morton, his ex-Cabinet officer, who was charged with a violation of the Sherman antitrust law, a law that was plain, and notwithstanding many charged, he was a self-confessed violator of this law, still the whitewash was applied—the President rushed into print a letter addressed to the Attorney-General, demanding that this poor, miserable worm, the insignificant subordinate, who had betrayed his trust, should be promptly and vigorously prosecuted. If I recollect aright, the President demanded that he be consigned to the penitentiary.

The law officer of the Government, the Attorney-General, the matter having thus been brought to his attention, set on foot—and I would not have alluded to this but for the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts—the law officer of the Cabinet, desiring to carry out the will of his superior to enforce the law, set upon foot an investigation to see what could be done to meet this public demand, this righteous demand, that the official who had violated his trust, who had proven unfaithful, should be punished in some way for the act he had committed.

The Attorney-General made investigation. Now, as to the result of that investigation, whether the Attorney-General reached the conclusion that there was no law on the statute to punish this unfaithful official, I will not say, for as I understand it some character of prosecution is still being attempted, but I will say that the Secretary of Agriculture, the first time I met him afterwards, asked that a bill be introduced penalizing such acts, a bill making such acts an offense, and that is what I have done by the introduction of this bill. Mr. Speaker, I will say, furthermore, that the Secretary of Agriculture earnestly favors this measure. Furthermore, your President recommended it in his message. I read from his message to this Congress:

> Legislation should also be enacted to cover explicitly, unequivocally, and beyond question breach of trust in the shape of prematurely divulging official secrets by an officer or employee of the United States, and to provide a suitable penalty therefor. Such officer or employee owes the duty to the United States to guard carefully and not to divulge or in any manner use prematurely information which is accessible to the officer or employee by reason of his official position. Most breaches of public trust are already covered by the law, and this one should be. It is impossible, no matter how much care is used, to prevent the occasional appointment to the public service of a man who when tempted proves unfaithful; but every means should be provided to detect and every effort made to punish the wrongdoer. So far as in my power lies, each and every such wrongdoer shall be relentlessly hunted down; in no instance in the past has he been spared; in no instance in the future shall he be spared. His crime is a crime against every honest man in the nation, for it is a crime against the whole body politic.

I will say furthermore that the Attorney-General of the United States——

Mr. McCALL. Did the President refer to this particular form of bill?

Mr. BURLESON. Why, certainly not. But I challenge any well-informed lawyer here to prepare a comprehensive measure covering this situation in any other form than the one I have introduced and which we are now considering. You can not do it; it can not be done. The President urged the passage of such a bill. In the same message the President also says:

> In my last message I asked the attention of the Congress to the urgent need of action to make our criminal law more effective; and I most earnestly request that you pay heed to the report of the Attorney-General on this subject.

The Attorney-General said in his report, if you turn to it, and I read from his report:

> Misconduct in office was always a grave offense under the English common law. As such it was brought to this country and was embedded in the common law of Maryland and thence was transplanted to the District of Columbia. Various decisions of the courts of this district show that there this crime is a Federal offense, although within the territory of the States there are no Federal common-law crimes.
> After experience in pending cases, and notably the "cotton leak" case, and after careful reflection, I am convinced that the Federal statutory law should make this an offense throughout the United States. Its present local meaning and application should be enlarged for purposes of punishment substantively and for purposes of removal for trial in general between all the districts of the United States. The scope of the crime under the common law should be reduced to precise specification. It is true, as a mere possibility, as the matter stands at present, that irregularities and misbehavior, which are blamable but trifling, may be included in the definition of the offense; but the most serious and essentially criminal matters which now escape definition and punishment in the criminal code are also included.
> It is entirely feasible to insure by the terms of the statute against tyrannical persecution on petty accounts, but the law should at once take cognizance of those situations in the recent history of administration where dishonest and conspiring officers of the Government, taking advantage of loopholes and omissions in the law, have skillfully concerted, to the vital injury of the public or the Government, schemes which are essentially fraudulent and corrupt.
> On a recent occasion (in the "cotton-leak" matter) for testing this subject, the difficulties confronting the United States in extending the reach of the law for this offense beyond the confines of the District of Columbia and in securing removal for trial were sharply presented. A United States commissioner held that because the nature of the offense was local and peculiar to this jurisdiction and was not clearly defined, and because the charge might be made unjustly and improvidently for all sorts of trifling transactions, the United States was not entitled to a removal for trial of the particular accused persons. It is difficult to understand how this conclusion could be reached in a case presenting acts which were manifestly and essentially criminal in the highest degree. The principle is well established that the exercise of a right is not to be denied because in enforcing it there might possibly be in some suppositious case an abuse of power.
> I recommend, therefore, that a statute should be enacted at this session of the Congress which shall deal adequately with this subject, defining the offense, providing for its punishment, extending the prohibitions of the law throughout the United States, and including this offense in the present laws concerning removal or in any amendment of those laws which may be enacted consequent upon the recommendations relative to that subject which I have made in this report. I shall have the honor to submit hereafter to Congress an outline or suggestion of a suitable bill for this purpose.

Note that he says he will submit hereafter to Congress a comprehensive measure covering this matter.

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURLESON. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. OLCOTT. While this discussion was going on, I have received a telegram from a friend of mine in New York, and I would——

Mr. BURLESON. I decline to yield to the gentleman for a statement. I yielded to him for a question.

Mr. OLCOTT. I had a query that I wanted to make of the gentleman——

Mr. BURLESON. I decline to yield, Mr. Speaker. The Attorney-General had stated in his report that it was his purpose to submit to this body a comprehensive measure. After I prepared this bill I carried it to the Department of Justice as I had written it, in order to see whether it was broad enough to meet the Attorney-General's views. I have a letter from the Attorney-General approving this measure. I read it now to you:

> Hon. ALBERT S. BURLESON,
> MY DEAR SIR: Referring to the bill about to be introduced by you in the House of Representatives, defining and punishing that variety of misconduct in office which consists in the fraudulent publication of Government information by an officer or employee of the Government, or in speculation in the markets based thereon, I beg to say that the intent and language of your bill appear to me to strike at one of the most serious evils in official relations to the Government, and to be adequate for the purpose in view. Speaking to you informally, I therefore beg to say that I approve the bill. It is likely, however, that, in pursuance of the recommendation in my current annual report, I shall suggest to Congress before long a measure which shall deal with misconduct in office generally, either adding it to the list of Federal offenses without definition, leaving to the courts the duty of defining and applying the scope of the law, or defining the offense in the bill by language which shall seek to describe its general nature with specification sufficiently precise to include every variety of official misconduct which is really criminal.
> Very truly, yours, W. H. MOODY.

It is true the words "Members of Congress" were not in the bill at that time, but I stated to the Solicitor-General of the United States, one of the ablest lawyers on this continent, with whom I discussed it before its introduction, that it was my purpose to ultimately put these words in, and I have no apologies to offer for attempting so to do. I also informed the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS], that it was my purpose to have these words inserted in the bill, and I have no apology for it. I will not give the reasons why I did not at the start have these words embodied in it. Well, I will state this, there are said to be many pigeonholes in committee rooms where measures containing objectionable features or that do not meet the requirements of certain interests can be easily laid away, there to sleep the sleep that knows no waking. I would not be candid if I did not say that I anticipated some trouble in getting this bill through in this form.

I thought there would be trouble and for this reason did not start the bill with the words "Members of Congress" embraced therein. I was determined, though, to have them in if it was possible for me to accomplish it.

I intended to have those words placed in the bill upon the floor of the Senate of the United States, after it had passed through the committee stage in both bodies, and but for the fact that the junior Senator from Texas was called from his duties to a distant city because of his father's fatal illness, I would have had them put in the bill on the floor of the United States Senate.

The bill passed the Senate, the junior Senator from Texas having been called away was not present at the time, and the bill finally went to conference without the words "Members of Congress" in it. Mr. Speaker, I then went before the conference committee and asked that those words be put in the bill.

The conferees unanimously agreed that this should be done, and because of the rules of the two bodies it was understood that a frank statement should be made to each of the purpose sought to be accomplished. When the report was presented to the Senate the record will show that a full statement was made, and objection was made upon the floor of the Senate that it was in violation of the rules. No Senator was willing to get up in the open and say that he opposed the recommendation because it was applying this law to Members of Congress. The objection was made, and it was the sole objection made, that it was in violation of their rules.

Finally, after some discussion, upon the suggestion of the senior Senator, I believe it is, from Massachusetts, the distinguished historian, a man who I believe is one of the few men from the New England States in that great body who at all times faithfully represents his State and her people, and against whom the charge has never been made that he represents a special in—I will not complete that sentence for reasons that are obvious—this Senator suggested that the matter in controversy could be settled by passing a concurrent resolution authorizing the conferees to put the words "Members of Congress" in the bill. Now keep in mind that the bill as it originally passed this House did not embrace Members of Congress in its terms; it passed unanimously and no objection was heard from any quarter.

The concurrent resolution was prepared and adopted unanimously by the Senate and, be it said to the Senate's credit, it also adopted without opposition this conference report which is now here so stubbornly resisted. This concurrent resolution has also been adopted by this body and the words "Members of Congress" are now in the bill.

That fact seems to be the occasion of the trouble here. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] says the adoption of this report would be spreading snares for the feet of Members of Congress; that it would be setting statutory traps for those who come after us. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] might just as well have said that every law denouncing a crime that is placed upon the statute books sets a trap for men. Mr. Speaker, the criminal laws of this country set no traps for men, save the vicious, depraved, dishonest men. This bill setting a trap for honest Congressmen! No, it sets no traps, except for corrupt and venal Congressmen. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] has referred to the message sent here some time ago severely criticising a certain judicial officer. I have as little sympathy as any man on this floor with the scandalous reports that have been published broadcast with reference to Members of Congress, especially those at the other end of this Capitol. I have no respect for the muck raker. But, sir, I have just as little respect for the muck raker who holds the handle at the other end of the avenue, and through a message here rakes a judicial officer who happens to decide a case not in accord with Executive will as I have for the muck raker who through the yellowest of the yellow journals pours out his filth upon honest men who may for the time being be holding public office. I say this because I propose to follow the statement with another. Mr. Speaker, the conviction is ripening in this country that the law, when it touches the poor and the helpless, is swift in its enforcement, and that punishment for their wrong doing is easily brought to them, but that the rich and the powerful have nothing to fear, though officials acting under the sanctity of a solemn oath may be charged with its enforcement—the law as against these becomes weak and impotent.

Mr. Speaker, heretofore the law, as written, has been made to apply to all alike, though, as I have just said, it frequently does not bear on all with equal force. Have we now reached the period in our country's history when a law can be written and one class exempted from its provisions? Shall we define an offense and say if the lowly clerk in the Department is guilty of the act he shall be punished but if a member of Congress is guilty of the same act he is not to be punished? Is it "an exquisite absurdity" to insist this shall not be done?

Mr. Speaker, why should we not make this bill apply to ourselves? Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] offer us a substantial reason against the adoption of this report by simply asserting that "the idea had not been put forth since the foundation of the Government?" Many new things are happening in this wonderful country of ours. We are about to have a law regulating railroad rates. According to the logic of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] we must not have it because the idea had not been put forth since the foundation of the Government. Mr. Speaker, why is this bill being so stubbornly opposed?

I accord to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] absolute honesty of purpose. I do not mean to impugn his motives in any way, but I do say there are those who are hiding behind the brave fight that he has made, who are anxious to eliminate this phrase from this bill or defeat it. Ah, they try to make it a matter of jest. One gentleman says he would be afraid to give information about a burning barn. Another gentleman—I could not exactly understand him, but the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS]—asked if information given out about the passage of the parcel posts bill would be a violation of its provisions. Another expresses the fear that he would have to go down and get information every morning from some bureau chief to be sure he was not going to violate the law during the day. Not a bit of it.

This bill, in plain terms, says that any man who by virtue of the office he holds acquires information that would tend to affect the value of any product or stocks, and goes upon the mart to speculate in them before this information is made public through regular official channels, shall be guilty of a crime. Who stands here and says he ought not to be? If he acquires the information, not on the street corner, not in witnessing the burning of a barn, but acquires it by virtue of the office given to him by the people to represent them, and then takes advantage of this information and before the people he is representing has knowledge of it, goes to the market and speculates, profiting, it may be, at the expense of the very people who have trusted him as their representative, who can here be found that will attempt to justify it? I say such conduct should be declared by law a crime. The crime would be, not in giving out information but in acquiring information by virtue of the office he is holding and then using it for speculative purposes before others know it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Show me that language in the first section.

Mr. BURLESON. The first section does not apply to Members of Congress at all. It relates only to administrative and executive officers who gather statistical information.

Mr. OLMSTED. Not unless a Member of Congress is in the service of the Government.

Mr. BURLESON. It does not apply to Members of Congress at all, for under the decisions of the Supreme Court you must put the words "Members of Congress" in this bill if it is going to apply to Members at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; for a question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will permit me, I have thought that the important words, among the most important in either section, were these:

Information which under the law, or under the rules of any department—

it being official information—must not be published before a fixed time.

Is that stricken out?

Mr. BURLESON. Not at all. Do you mean in the second section of the bill?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. I will read it again, because I feel sure that many objections that have been voiced upon this floor are based upon misinformation and misunderstanding of what this bill contains.

Every officer, etc., * * * and every Member of Congress who shall, by virtue of the office or position held by him, become possessed of any information which would tend, etc., to affect the market value of any product, etc., or stocks or bonds, etc., and who shall before said information is made public through regular official channels, etc., speculate in said products, stocks, or bonds, etc., shall be punished by a fine, etc.—

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me to say one thing more? My understanding of the bill is as now reported, and I propose to support it if my understanding is correct, that the law gives to a certain Department the right to make investigations, acquire official information, and provides that it shall be kept secret until a certain time, and this amendment proposes that Representatives in Congress and Senators shall not go, as some of them are now reported to go—I do not know whether it is true or not—to the clerks and officials and, in advance of this time fixed by law, get the secret information and make money on it. If that is correct, I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. BURLESON. That is exactly what the bill is intended to prohibit.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And the only information that is touched upon in either section of the bill as last reported, as I understand it, is the information which the law or the Department says shall not be made public until a fixed time, so that everybody can have an equal right to use it?

Mr. BURLESON. That is exactly correct.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question. On page 2, lines 24 and 25—are they struck out in conference or not?

Mr. BURLESON. They were stricken out in conference.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Do I understand the gentleman to say that lines 24 and 25 are stricken out?

Mr. BURLESON. Lines 24 and 25 on page 2 were stricken out because the conferees held that it was unnecessary to repeat the words there and because, further, if the words "Members of Congress" are inserted as part of the bill those words stricken out become inconsistent with its other wording.

Mr. GARRETT rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. BURLESON. I will yield to the gentleman, but only for a question.

Mr. GARRETT. Page 2, lines 4, 5, and 6 read "which information is required by law or under the rules of any Department of the Government to be withheld from the public until a fixed time." Is it not, to say the least of it, very unusual to provide that the violation of some indefinite rule made at any time in the future by a Department shall be a criminal offense?

Mr. BURLESON. It would not be a violation upon the part of a Member unless he acquired the information in violation of the rules of the Department, and also by virtue of his official position, and should then further take the affirmative step of speculating in stocks or products, the market value of which would be affected by this information.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to be discourteous to the gentleman, but I can not yield further. Mr. Speaker, I want some man to state to me why the words "Members of Congress" should be stricken from this bill when we understand that it applies to the humblest clerk in the Departments the head of every bureau, and——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. I would like five minutes more.

Mr. JENKINS. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BURLESON. I would like to know why these words should be stricken out when it is understood that this law is sought to be made to apply to every clerk however humble, to the chief of every bureau, to the head of every department of the Government, and to the President of the United States himself. For the proper protection of society crime not alone in every degree should be vigorously condemned, but punishment should be visited upon those who commit it regardless of their wealth or official station.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order. Have we not the privilege and the right to demand a copy of the bill to know what we are voting on? I can not obtain a copy of the bill as it is amended at all. The bills on the desk do not contain the provisions that the gentleman is discussing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All the light has been given by printing the conference report in the RECORD.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned—and I do not want the House to misunderstand my position—I have no disposition to have a single man in this body vote without knowing what he is voting upon. If the gentleman from Wisconsin wants to do it, and it can be done so as to ultimately insure a vote on this bill, I am perfectly willing that it shall go over until a reprint of the bill, as agreed upon, may be had. I certainly want the membership of this body to vote with its eyes open, so that no man may afterwards say the measure was not by him thoroughly understood.

If the time has come in this country when we propose to exempt one class from the operation of the criminal law, or a bill is to be killed because an effort is made to apply its terms to all alike, I want to know it. The English-speaking people, the first of the great self-governing people, recollecting the tyranny of former rulers and the oppression of former laws, ever watchful of their liberties and jealous of their rights, have for years and years hedged the citizens and the individual about with protections and technicalities of the law until in this country we have reached a point where it is not the innocent who are in danger of conviction, but where it is almost impossible to punish the guilty. Every man within the sound of my voice knows that this is true.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think, with all respect to the gentleman from Texas, that the gentleman is mistaken as to the effect of the second section as I have been reading it. Information which would come to a Senator or Representative in Congress would not come to him "by virtue of his office," because there is no requirement of law which says that that information shall be given to him; he might investigate, but it would not come "by virtue of his office." It comes to the Secretary of Agriculture by virtue of his office when the law authorizes him to conduct an investigation, and then by rule or by the law enacted by Congress that information must not be made public before a fixed time.

Mr. BURLESON. That is what we are trying to do now, to make a law prohibiting the use of public office for private gain.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Which requires that I shall get any information of any kind except such as I go out voluntarily and seek.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman is not asking a question, and I have only a few minutes more. I say to the gentleman that six of as good lawyers as can be found in the Congress were on the conference committee, and after carefully weighing the very suggestions now made by the gentleman from Wisconsin this conference report was formulated. The bill carefully guards against the punishment of any innocent or unsophisticated Congressman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I just want to ask one more question, and then I will be through.

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, I must decline to yield. I have only a few minutes more. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I have only this to say: The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] has said that Members come here from all sorts of occupations or business, and that they should be permitted to exercise a degree of commercial freedom, and to that I certainly have no objection. But, Mr. Speaker, I insist that the people do not send their Representatives here for the purpose of enabling them to fill their pockets by an improper use of the important office they hold. Surely no one will contend that a Member of Congress should be permitted to promote his private fortune by speculating on information which may come to him as a Member of an important committee, and that, too, at the expense of the very people who have given him his office, while they are still in ignorance of the information the Member uses to enable him to make a gainful speculation. I have no objection to the business man in Congress, but I do object to the use by him of that office to acquire information to promote by speculation his business interest. Who is there here who will say this should be done? The purpose of this bill is to prevent such practices, if anyone can be found who would be willing to engage in them.

Mr. Speaker, we now have no law to prevent or punish such practices. We have no law to punish officials who betray the trust imposed on them to keep until a fixed time valuable statistical information gathered for the benefit of all the people. The President properly characterized such conduct in his message, and it is our duty to enact a comprehensive law covering such cases. The adoption of this conference report will accomplish this result. The passage of this bill will cast no slur on any member of Congress, and will be the occasion of no worry or trouble to any honest Member. As it is now, we have no law covering this class of wrongs.

On the 10th day of this month, when two of the men who were said to be implicated with the clerk who betrayed his trust last summer, were on trial in New York, Justice Holt, who, I understand, is an able lawyer, dismissed the case, and in disposing of the matter said that in so far as he saw—I now read from a New York paper—"there was nothing in the law to have made it obligatory on Statistician H—— to have kept secret the statistical facts contained in the cotton reports, no matter how reprehensible the divulging of them may have been." Now, the Secretary of Agriculture is anxious for a law to cover such cases. The people——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, in view of the suggestions just made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], I would ask unanimous consent that this matter go over until some day next week, when it may be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, I object, because in the beginning I appealed for that and the gentleman refused.

Mr. BURLESON. To what gentleman does the gentleman from Ohio refer?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I appealed to have this printed and that the matter go over until Monday, and it was objected to.

Mr. BURLESON. Does the gentleman say that I objected to it?

Mr. LILLEY of Pennsylvania. You certainly did.

Mr. BURLESON. I state to the gentleman that I have made no such objection, and make none now, so far as I am concerned, and I have repeatedly said this. I am willing that all possible light should be turned on this measure.

Mr. GROSVENOR. We are all ready to vote now.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCALL. The gentleman from Massachusetts desires to ask a question, and I yield to the gentleman for two minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I only want two minutes in which to ask an elaborate question. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] and the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], to whom I shall address this question.

Last autumn the United States fisheries of this country were in controversy with Newfoundland and Great Britain over our rights under the treaty of 1818 in herring fishing. I was here in Washington representing my constituents before the State Department. I was in constant touch with the captains of our fleets by cable with Newfoundland, with the Board of Trade in Gloucester, and with many individuals. I was continually in touch with them and in consultation with the State Department, which was acting in our behalf with the government of Newfoundland and with the Government of Great Britain. I was advising our captains by cable whether to set their nets, whether to ship the crews on the high seas, whether to fit out their vessels in Gloucester, and incidentally while I was publishing that information, which I got in the Department and which was not given out generally to the public, the price of herrings kept fluctuating in the open market. In other words, I was giving out information which incidentally tended to affect the price of an article produced in the United States. Now, I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] and afterwards the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] whether under the provisions of this bill both the Secretary of State and myself could not have been imprisoned, and if they say no, then I ask them to point out to me why not.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I say not, because the Secretary of State was giving out to the gentleman through regular official channels the information that came to him.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. But that clause has been stricken out.

Mr. McCALL. I think it is clear that the Secretary of State would have to go to jail under this bill. The gentleman from Texas is a very good lawyer, but he has demonstrated, especially in reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin, that he does not understand this bill at all. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Sixteen minutes.

Mr. McCALL. I yield twelve minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not doubt that the purpose of this legislation is a wise purpose. I do not doubt that there is necessity for the enactment of some statute in regard to the subject-matter. It could have been put in ten lines. Let me now suggest, "whoever being an officer or employee of any Department of the Federal Government who shall give out any fact, or statement, or confidential communication, or any statistics of any crop or crops or other production of the United States without the authority of the head of such Deparment shall be punished," etc. Now, there is the whole of this trouble all provided for in this short section, and instead we have offered to us a criminal statute that might involve the President of the United States or any judge upon the bench, and every Congressman and every Senator and everybody else, in order to reach that simple little provision that any country lawyer could have written in ten minutes and made absolutely conclusive the whole subject. Why, Mr. Speaker, let me call attention to one or two provisions of this bill, and I have at least succeeded after a long struggle with the mystery of this conference report in working out through the aid of the Clerk substantially what the bill is.

> Every officer or employee of the United States, and every person acting for or on behalf of the United States in any official capacity under or by virtue of the authority of any Department or office of the Government, who shall while holding said such office become possessed—

Think of that now. Who is to say when a man is "become possessed" of some information?

Mr. BURLESON. Did the gentleman ask me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I did not ask you, and you can not answer. The jury is to say, are they not? Well, I got it from a newspaper, I got it from a report on the street, I got it from conversation with an employee of the Government, but I "became possessed" of it. Now, then, there are two things to be decided as questions of fact: First, that I am possessed of it, and, second, that it "tends to affect the value of bonds of the Government or of any corporation." I get some information; I "become possessed" of some information that if it is given out to the public will affect the bonds of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and I give it out—no matter whether it "tends" to raise or lower the bonds. I am a Congressman, or an employee of the United States; I am sent to the penitentiary for it. That is this law, that is exactly this law; and the jury is to decide how I got it, how valuable it is, and what I did with it. In all the history of judicial legislation an equal monstrosity to the one here was never produced by the genius of man. [Laughter.] No wonder when they sent this section up to the Committee on Revision of the Laws and undertook to have it incorporated in one of the chapters of the criminal statutes of the United States the committee rejected it without any hesitation whatever. Let us see, now, what else there is in this bill. I am an employee of one of these departments, and my friend from Texas is another.

The chief of the bureau or department concludes that he had better send one of us to the penitentiary, and so he gives me, for instance, some information to-day, and to-morrow he makes a regulation and puts it up, saying that no information on that subject shall be given out. I do not know anything about it, and I give it out, and I am gone. Then he concludes it would be a pretty good thing to let the gentleman from Texas give out some information on the same matter, and he rubs off the regulation immediately, and my friend from Texas goes ahead and speculates, and the next day afterwards he puts up the regulation again to stop anybody else from giving it out. That is this law, and you can not make anything else out of it. No intelligent man can defend the proposition from the attack which I have made. Mr. Speaker, never before in all the history of judicial legislation in this country was a bureau officer permitted to create a criminal statute in the United States—to create a crime and fix the penalty, as with this law is clearly provided. That is exactly this law. It is done for a wise purpose, I have conceded, but it was so easy to have reached this question by a ten-line statute that I am amazed that it should have ever found its way in here. I indorse what the gentleman from Massachusetts has said. Congressmen ought not to be, just at this particular time, holding out to the people of the United States that there ought to be some barrier in the form of a criminal statute put up against intelligent action of a Member of Congress. I am going out of Congress, and I do not expect to violate this statute during the period I stay in; but I protest, on behalf of the gentlemen who are to continue to make laws for my country, that it is degrading the very office and name of a Congressman to say that he must go to the penitentiary if he happens to give out information of which he becomes possessed. Think of that! Why should you attempt to degrade the office of Congressman in this way?

There never was the like of this in the English language. Suppose somebody had polled the Senate a day or two ago and found out exactly what was to be in the rate bill, and obtained it from some United States official, and became "possessed of" the information and gave it out, and the jury would say that it tended to affect the value of railroad securities in the United States? And the funny part of it is that the Government is going to send a man to the penitentiary for stating something that increases the value of Government bonds in a given case. There it is. That it tends to affect the Government bonds!

Why, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] gets upon the floor and makes one of his powerful attacks on plutocracy and the holders of Government bonds, it might have a tendency to lower the price of them; but, on the other hand, if the President of the United States should issue a message to Congress saying that he was in favor of a certain action in regard to the finances of the Government, that might increase the value of the Government bonds, and he has violated this statute just as much as the gentleman from Texas has.

Mr. Speaker, I hope Congress will sit down on this measure. It can not be defeated by too large a majority. Then let the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] come with his measure to suppress publicity, although just at this time that sounds a little curious from a gentleman from the South, or from the North, even. We are told now that the very life and future of the Republic are going to depend upon certain enactments that will produce publicity of everything that is going on, so that everybody will know just how much money everybody else has. I do not care much for such a statute as that myself. It will not have a very powerful effect upon me.

Now they want it made a crime to divulge a secret. They are perfectly willing to vote, and I will vote, for such a bill, if it be constructed upon such terms as to be just, equal, and fair; but to reach out and propose that the people of the United States are compelled to protect the interests of the people of the United States themselves against the cupidity and bad morals of the Congress of the United States, I have too much pride in my long relation to Congress to vote for such a measure as that. [Applause.]

I yield back my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. McCALL. How much time has the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS]?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twenty-eight minutes.

Mr. JENKINS. I would like to have the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] use his time now.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I think the course of this debate has amply justified me in directing the attention of the House to this measure. I think that my friend from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], a very good lawyer, has proven in the presence of the House that he does not understand the exact meaning of this measure. He has made a very strong case here by insisting upon the default. He says that it has passed the House, it has passed the Senate, and this thing was done by the House and another thing by the Senate, and yet I adhere to my original proposition. Possibly there may be more than five, but, I dare say, there are not more than a dozen Members who understood this bill. The gentlemen about me know whether they knew about this bill when it passed or not. And if there are a dozen Members, the gentleman from Texas can not be included in their number. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not pleading for the exemption of Members of Congress. I want to reiterate what I said when on the floor before, that the original bill, applicable to the executive officers, ought never to pass this House. I do not believe any Member here would want to go into the Cabinet if he went in under the penalty of a minimum of a year in the penitentiary if in an unguarded moment he gave some member of the press or somebody else some information, which he happened to know as an officer, which might tend to affect the value of all this property.

Mr. BURLESON. I feel sure that the gentleman does not want to mislead anybody. He has stated that the minimum punishment prescribed in the bill is a year in the penitentiary. The second section of this bill, the only section which applies to Members of Congress, might be violated and no penitentiary penalty visited against the violator.

Mr. McCALL. Now, in regard to the gentleman's suggestion, I would ask Members to read the first section of the bill, and see that the minimum penalty inflicted for giving a newspaper man or anybody else any of this information is a year in the penitentiary.

Mr. BURLESON. That does not apply to Members of Congress.

Mr. McCALL. That is the point I made before the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] interrupted me. I think the original bill ought not to pass. And then I asked the gentleman who proposed to broaden the measure to give some affirmative reason why it should include Members of Congress—that is, some other reason than that it was necessary to complete the absurdity of the absurd bill—and he did not get back of the bill. He took the bill as his standard and reasoned from that.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman knows quite well that my time expired before I finished my remarks. But I can give him an instance, or reason, for its passage, so far as that is concerned. Every Member of this House, I believe, will remember that a few years ago a stockbroker—Chapman, by name, as I recollect it—was, during an investigation in regard to a scandal in reference to the sale of sugar stocks, committed to jail, or, rather, permitted himself to be sent to jail and kept there for a number of days, declining to disclose the information, growing out of a transaction similar to that which I now propose to reach by this bill. If I can have my way, I would denounce such transactions as violations of the law.

Mr. McCALL. I say that case would not be covered by this bill at all. Then I want to say further that since that instance—and he needs to go back nearly to the time of the fathers for it, and the fathers did not see fit to legislate—we have had famine, we have had prosperity, we have had peace, and we have had war, and he has had to go back a dozen years for an instance which he claims would justify the broad provision which he proposes to enact in the bill. Furthermore, I would say that that particular case was dealt with by the body having authority over it. It was the Senate of the United States. It did inaugurate an investigation and did not find that these terrible things were proven of which the gentleman complains—and the only thing that was clearly shown by the investigation, if there should be any change in the statutes, was that the penalty for a witness refusing to answer might properly be increased. Now, if the gentleman thinks he has provided——

Mr. COCKRAN. I would like to suggest that in that case the complaint was, not that the man disclosed things, but that he would not disclose them. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCALL. I thank the gentleman for his witty and effective interruption.

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; if the gentleman will also permit me, it was a refusal to disclose about the practice of a United States Senator who was speculating in sugar stocks upon information that came to him by virtue of the important office he held.

Mr. COCKRAN. Not the information; for it was not a matter of information whatever, but simply a Senator speculated on what he probably knew himself, how he would vote, for or against a certain measure.

Mr. McCALL. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman wants to cure an evil that is here, he will limit the remedy to the evil. This illustrates the freedom with which we pass penal statutes with their purely legislative standards of right and wrong. I venture to say that if all the penal statutes—Federal and State—were strictly enforced at any given moment of time there would be very few people in this country outside of the penitentiary. [Laughter.] And that statement does not impeach the rectitude of the people of the United States.

After hearing of this trouble about cotton, the gentleman tries to perfect the whole universe in order to take care of cotton. Now, the gentleman might propose a law dealing with products of the soil—and I do not know of any confidential governmental statistics that do not relate to products of the soil—and limited to that, in ten lines, and he would have a bill to which there would be very little objection and would not invite the great evils that this bill will invite.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman think such a bill could be passed and enforced that would keep these statistics secret so long as the great interests on each side concerned are trying to make them public?

Mr. McCALL. For my part I do not believe in secret statistics.

Mr. PAYNE. Would it not be better to make them known as they went along?

Mr. McCALL. If this bill passed, a seat in this House would be a prize for a rogue and not an honest man. An honest man would need to have a lawyer at his elbow to keep him out of the penitentiary. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I beg the indulgence of the House for only a few moments of time. I would not consume any time had it not been for one or two remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Now, everybody knows that the gentleman from Massachusetts is honest and needs no defender, and whatever he said in reference to this matter, as springing from the various methods and from business necessities, we are well satisfied that there is no danger that he will get into a net and be taken to the United States prison for the part he will take, so far as that is concerned. But the gentleman said that the Judiciary Committee had not considered this bill—that is, if I understand him correctly. About that the gentleman is simply mistaken. This bill was very carefully considered by the subcommittee first, consisting of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING], the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], and there was no hurry about it.

After they had amended the bill, it was reported to the full committee, and the full committee spent the entire morning hour in the consideration of this bill. It was brought into this House; and it seems a reflection upon the intelligence of the gentlemen here to-day when they come in and plead infancy and ignorance, saying that they did not know anything about it. This bill was brought into this House and passed without a single dissenting vote. The amendments were read. The RECORD shows that the bill was read and the amendments were agreed to, and the bill was passed and sent to the Senate. That body concurred.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I will state that I have been informed by a member of the Judiciary Committee that he was present when the bill was considered, and it was passed by a bare majority of the committee.

Mr. JENKINS. I wish you would give the name of that gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not desire to do that. The gentleman is upon the floor.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman should not make such a statement.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have been told by two members of the committee that they did not know that this bill was before the committee.

Mr. JENKINS. Several gentlemen have pleaded ignorance here this morning.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it does not make any difference whether a big majority were present or not.

Mr. HEDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. HEDGE. Does the gentleman mean to insist that the committee passed this bill on purpose? [Laughter.]

Mr. JENKINS. I do not think that is a question that demands any answer, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I want the House to thoroughly understand that after this bill passed the House it went to the Senate and received very serious consideration, first in the committee and then in the Senate. After the matter had once been introduced in the Senate it was withheld for further consideration. I speak of that so that the House may know that gentlemen in the other body thoroughly understood what they were doing. The Senate made some amendments that, in the judgment of this House, it could not agree to, and a conference committee was agreed upon.

When the question was presented to the conference as to whether or not Members of Congress were included in the meaning of that bill, it was an embarrassing question. Some gentlemen insisted that under the broad language of the bill Members of Congress were included, and I am speaking of it because I understand there would be no objection here this morning to the adoption of this conference report if Members of Congress were excluded. They are not looking after the President of the United States; they are not looking after the charwomen and charmen of this Government; they are simply looking after themselves.

Mr. McCALL. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. McCALL. The gentleman does not intend to say that I ever made a statement of that kind—that I would favor the bill if Members of Congress were not included?

Mr. JENKINS. I never made any such statement. I have not mentioned the gentleman's name. I said I am satisfied from what I have learned that there would be no objection to this bill if Members of Congress were not included.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin permit me?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. I should like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if I misunderstood him in saying that if this bill was made to apply to the products of the farm, he would have no objection to it whatever?

Mr. McCALL. I will answer the gentleman. I stated to him just what I stated on the floor of the House. I did not say products of the farm. I said that you could apply your bill to the confidential statistics required to be collected as to the products of the soil. I stated that in the concluding words which I addressed to the House.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not want any misunderstanding with the gentleman about the matter. As I understood the gentleman, he said if it was applied to statistics gathered with reference to the products of the farm he would have no objection to the bill, and I answered that all I wanted was to have the Members of Congress exhibit the courage to go on record against it.

Mr. McCALL. I think there are gentlemen here who will have courage to go on record against the whole bill.

Mr. JENKINS. I was simply saying first that the Judiciary Committee very carefully considered this bill, and then that the matter was brought to the attention of both House and Senate. I say further that when the conference committee met——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am in entire sympathy with the gentleman in the purpose which he seeks to accomplish by this proposed legislation, but I want to ask him this question about the second section: It reads, to summarize it, "Any Member of Congress who shall by virtue of his office or position become possessed of any information and who shall before said information is made public through regular official channels," etc. Now, what information does the gentleman from Wisconsin in charge of this bill, or do I as a Representative in Congress, acquire by virtue of my official position, that has a fixed time before it must not be made public through regular official channels?

Mr. JENKINS. I will try to answer the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think the difficulty is that you struck out "and which information is required by law or under the rules of any Department of the Government to be withheld from publication until a certain time."

Mr. JENKINS. That is a fair question. I am speaking now of the knowledge the House has in regard to the matter. When we were in conference we were met with this proposition. This House and the Senate had both unanimously agreed that the President of the United States and the charmen and the charwomen and the page boys in the House and Senate should not give out any information, and the question was addressed to the conference committee as to whether or not they intended to exclude Members of Congress, and have it go to the country at large that the people I am speaking of were forbidden to give out this information, but Members of Congress could use it and enjoy it to their advantage. That was a perplexing question, and some of the gentlemen here know what my attitude was with reference to it. We hesitated long as to how to bring it to the attention of the House.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JENKINS. It bothers me to be disturbed in this way, but I will yield to my good friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCALL. I was simply going to ask the gentleman, if the divulging of information by the charwomen, and the clerks, and the President, and so forth, should be a crime, why it should not be a crime if divulged by a Member of Congress? In other words, why should you not include a Member of Congress in the first section of your bill?

Mr. JENKINS. We were authorized to include it, but gentlemen seem to be afraid of it. Now, then, Mr. Speaker, as I say, we were confronted with this question; it was pressed upon the conference committee very strongly, and I do not think I violate any confidence when I say that I thought it was proper to come to this House and ask permission to include Members of Congress. But it was finally suggested that another way was better, and we finally yielded to it, and a concurrent resolution was introduced in the Senate—unanimously passed in the Senate—authorizing the conference committee to include Members of Congress. That resolution was brought into this House and unanimously adopted by the House. The conferees followed the direction of this House in regard to this proposition.

Now, there are a lot of gentlemen want to depart from it, and cast an inference that the conference committee did not do their full duty in regard to this matter. I would not have yielded to it for a moment if we had not considered it as an instruction of the House. Now, gentlemen on the floor plead ignorance, and say that this is the first time they ever heard of it.

I want to say that when this bill was reported it was reported to this House in the usual manner by a written report, giving all the facts, and was placed upon the record almost three months ago. I say that it does not reflect credit on these gentlemen who stand up here and say that this is the first ime they ever heard of it.

Now, going back to the other matter, I want to say that the proposition that was presented to the conference committee was this: Both Houses of Congress permitted the conference committee to include Members of Congress. We found this difficulty: We found that the Department obtains information that is very valuable; that almost anybody in the employ of the Government might obtain. We did not know exactly who they were, but we found that it might be an officer of the Government, or it might be an employee of the Government, and it was concluded to embrace them both, so as to put it beyond all question. We could not exclude some by saying that this shall not apply to the President of the United States or to the Vice-President, but it was deemed best to make the language very general and not only apply to the Agricultural Department, but to all the Departments of the Government. The matter was pressed upon the committee by a Department of this Government, and we were urged to pass this bill, and we have brought it up to this House; and, Mr. Speaker, if this House does not want to agree to the conference report, the responsibility rests upon the House and not upon the Judiciary Committee. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BURLESON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays. All those in favor of the yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] Sixteen gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURLESON) there were—ayes 26, noes 101.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-five Members present—a quorum.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I move to lay the bill and amendments on the table.

Mr. BURLESON. And if there is no quorum present, Mr. Speaker, the next thing is a roll call.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present; and the motion is to lay the bill and amendments on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURLESON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURLESON. As I understand it, an affirmative vote is to lay the conference report upon the table, and that carries the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again state the motion. The motion is to lay the bill with the amendments upon the table. The House has already disagreed to the conference report.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I make no pretensions to being a parliamentary sharp, and I want to ask the Chair for information. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay the bill or any measure on the table is not debatable.

Mr. BURLESON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Is it possible for the gentleman to make one without debating it?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly, Mr. Speaker; I never violate the rules of the House. Is it too late to ask for a nonconcurrence in the conference report, and ask for a further conference?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the motion to lay on the table would dispose of the bill, and has precedence under the rule.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 107, nays 66, answered "present" 35, not voting 173, as follows:

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom were referred the memorial of the members of the Civic Club, of Harrisburg, Pa., and the memorial of 600 members of the New Century Club, of Philadelphia, and the Iris Club of Lancaster, Pa., remonstrating against the repeal of the so-called "Morris law" for the protection of the forests, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of 514 citizens of Washington County, Idaho, remonstrating against any extension of or addition to the timber reserve in that county and the creation of any new reserve therein, asked to be discharged from its consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game; which was agreed to.

Mr. MILLARD, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States transmitting copies of correspondence between himself and the Secretary of War on the subject of the purchase of two steel dredges for the Panama Canal, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance; which was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. PETTUS. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back without amendment the bill (S. 6176) providing for pay of expenses of district judges, and I ask for its present consideration. The bill merely puts the district judges on an equality as to their expenses. The present law gives to a district judge his expenses when holding court outside of his district. There are four or five judges in the United States who have two districts, and in that case the bill merely provides that they shall have their expenses paid when holding court outside of the district in which they live. That is the only change.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the reasonable expenses actually incurred, not to exceed $10 per day each, for travel and attendance of district judges when holding court outside of the district in which they reside shall be paid by the marshal of the district in which said court is held, on the written certificate of the judge, and said payment shall be allowed the marshal in the settlement of his accounts with the United States.

Mr. KEAN. May I ask the Senator from Alabama if the law does not now authorize the payment of their actual expenses? The language of the bill is "reasonable expenses."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The language is "the reasonable expenses actually incurred."

Mr. KEAN. All right; I have no objection to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BACK RIVER BRIDGE, NEAR WHEELING, W. VA.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6146) to authorize the Back River Bridge Company to build a bridge across the west or smaller division of the Ohio River from Wheeling Island, West Virginia, to the Ohio shore, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Arkansas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PEND D'OREILLE RIVER DAM, WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6038) authorizing the construction of a dam across the Pend d'Oreille River, in the State of Washington, by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, for the development of water power, electrical power, and for other purposes, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 2, line 16, after the word "approval," to strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY E. RHOADES.

Mr. HALE. There is a House bill on the table which I ask be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The bill (H. R. 1997) for the relief of Henry E. Rhoades, assistant engineer, United States Navy, retired, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to transfer Assistant Engineer Henry E. Rhoades, upon the retired list of the United States Navy, from the half-pay list to the 75 per cent pay list of retired officers, under section 1588 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to take effect from the date of his retirement.

Mr. HALE. A similar bill has already passed the Senate, and I ask that this bill may be placed on its passage now.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 6213) for the relief of C. W. Sturtevant, Rolla Brown, Alice Brown, M. L. Kelly, Robert G. Duffy, Fread Gehring, T. H. Ross, and L. C. Partee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BEVERIDGE introduced a bill (S. 6219) to provide for the inspection, examination, and supervision of live cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, and the carcasses and food products thereof, which are the subjects of interstate or foreign commerce, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DRYDEN introduced a bill (S. 6220) to provide for the erection of a monument on the battlefield of Gettysburg to commemorate the services of the Signal Corps of the United States Army during the war of the rebellion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. HEMENWAY introduced a bill (S. 6221) granting an increase of pension to Joseph McBride; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 6222) granting an increase of pension to John A. Alden; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALGER introduced a bill (S. 6223) granting an increase of pension to William E. Cummin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McCREARY introduced a bill (S. 6224) for the relief of B. F. Van Meter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6225) for the relief of James Webb; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MALLORY (for Mr. TALIAFERRO) introduced a bill (S. 6226) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Mickler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DUBOIS introduced a bill (S. 6227) to grant an extension of certain letters patent to assignees of John A. Gunn; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 6228) granting a pension to Betsey Hattery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HANSBROUGH introduced a bill (S. 6229) to authorize the sale of public lands for cemetery purposes; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. OVERMAN introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6230) granting an increase of pension to Nellie Paxton;

A bill (S. 6231) granting a pension to Caroline Lankford (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6232) granting an increase of pension to John L. Anthony.

Mr. PATTERSON introduced a bill (S. 6233) granting an increase of pension to George E. Vanderwalker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill (S. 6234) to authorize the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, of Montana, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River in Lewis and Clarke County, Mont.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

JOSEPH D. ARMSTRONG.

On motion of Mr. McCUMBER, it was Ordered, That the bill S. 5806, Calendar No. 3174, granting an increase of pension to Joseph D. Armstrong be indefinitely postponed, the beneficiary having died.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 850. An act making appropriation to pay to the legal representatives of the estate of Samuel Lee, deceased, to wit, Samuel Lee, Anna Lee Andrews, Clarence Lee, Robert Lee, Harry A. Lee, and Phillip Lee, heirs at law, in full for any claim for pay and allowances made by reason of the election of said Lee to the Forty-seventh Congress and his services therein, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ENGINEERING WORK ON ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, on the 15th of this month, during the debate on the rate bill and upon the particular subject of salaries for the Interstate Commerce Commissioners, in opposition to the increase of such salaries I submitted some remarks. To illustrate the point I desired to make at that time, namely, that we would not secure perfect judgment by paying an excessive salary, I called attention to certain disagreements between two of the highest salaried men in the Government employ in the matter of excavating for the Panama Canal.

Since that time I received a letter from Mr. John F. Wallace, who was at one time chief engineer in charge of that work, and who seemed to think that he had not been treated with entire justice in this matter and asked a little correction. Desiring that he shall be heard on any subject pertaining to that discussion, I ask permission that his letter may be read, and printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

MAY 16, 1906.

Hon. P. J. McCUMBER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg to call your attention to the following statement, which appeared in the Washington Evening Star of May 15:

"Senator McCUMBER opposed the provision as a 'surreptitious effort to increase salaries.' He did not believe that Commissioners should be paid more than Federal court judges. He referred to the high salaries paid to the engineers in connection with the Panama Canal, saying that notwithstanding Mr. Wallace had received a salary of $25,000 or $30,000 a year, Mr. Shonts had testified that the dirt he had dumped would have to be removed. 'We can get men to do bad work for less pay,' he declared. Senator MORGAN said that no such testimony had been given in the canal matter, but Mr. McCUMBER stuck to his point."

If you will kindly glance at the testimony of Mr. Stevens, the present chief engineer of the Panama Canal, you will find that on page 94 Mr. Stevens, in direct reply to the question whether or not Mr. Wallace had wasted material, which would have to be removed, stated that he had not, that that was a "slur" upon Mr. Wallace. I quote from Mr. Stevens's testimony, as follows:

"Mr. TALIAFERRO. Speaking of the economy, or want of economy, in the expenditures down there, did not I understand you to say that you had been using some of the French dumps where the material would have to be moved later, and that that has been done since we have been doing the work?

"Mr. STEVENS. No; you did not understand me correctly. Whatever material we have to move or will have to move was material that was dumped there by the French.

"Mr. TALIAFERRO. Did you not say you were using some of the same dumps?

"Mr. STEVENS. Some of the same dumping grounds, but putting it farther in. There has not been a spoonful that we have dumped that will have to be dumped again; no.

"Senator GORMAN. I am glad to have you make that statement. There was a public statement that some of the stuff Mr. Wallace had taken out had to be removed.

"Mr. STEVENS. No; that is a slur on Mr. Wallace; that is not so at all."

You will also note, on page 2540 of the testimony before the Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals, the following statement of Secretary Taft:

"I am sorry to have been misled into the incorrect statement of Mr. Stevens's views, which Mr. Wallace regards as a slur upon his work. From Mr. Stevens's reports and from his evidence until the question was definitely put, I had supposed that he intended to say that some of the dumps used by Mr. Wallace would have to be removed, and so some members of the committee understood Mr. Stevens's statement to mean this; but when the direct question was put, it appeared that while some of the old French dumps, where material was deposited by Mr. Wallace, would have to be moved, none of the material which Mr. Wallace placed there would have to be removed. I regret the mistake very much."

As to characterizing such a statement as a "slur" upon me, Mr. Stevens made use of this expression in his testimony before the Senate committee, and the word was not used by me as indicated by Secretary Taft.

In view of the testimony of Mr. Stevens and Secretary Taft, I hope you will do me the justice to correct your statement in regard to my connection with the work, if your remarks were as stated in the Star.

Very truly, yours, JOHN F. WALLACE.

Mr. McCUMBER. It may be proper for me to state at this time that I did not intend by those remarks to pass upon the comparative competency of the two engineers who were paid a salary of $30,000 each, or that of any other member of the Commission, but simply to demonstrate the fact that by paying higher salaries than is usual for the best of men in those particular occupations we would not necessarily add to the skill or competency of the officer, and we would not necessarily secure men whose judgment would be perfect.

But in order to justify the statement which I made, I also ask that that portion of document No. 69, of the Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, being a hearing before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate December 12, 1905, on page 34, and a little portion on page 36, which I have marked, may also be printed in the RECORD at this time, for the purpose of showing that there was entire foundation for the statement which I made. There are other mild criticisms with reference to Mr. Wallace in other pages of this same document, but my object in discussing the matter and making that point was not for the purpose of criticising, but for the purpose of showing that adding more than a reasonable compensation did not secure any better men than we would get if we paid a reasonable, just, and liberal compensation. I ask that those marked portions, comprising less than a page, may be printed in the RECORD. I will not ask that they be read, unless some Senator desires it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Secretary TAFT. Strictly speaking, 4,000 are in the sanitation department, and the other 13,000 are engaged in track work and in the construction of buildings, of machine works, of putting together the equipment, which has to be knocked down when it is sent down there, and in making surveys, and in all the preliminary work that is going on upon the Isthmus.

Senator HALE. In short, to get ready for the work of excavation.

Secretary TAFT. Yes, sir. Mr. Stevens states—and I think Mr. Shonts agrees with him—that Mr. Wallace made a mistake in expending what he did expend for actual excavation in the Culebra cut.

Senator TELLER. Why?

Secretary TAFT. It was not done for the purpose of excavation, although it did accomplish, to the extent to which there was excavation, work which may not have to be done again. But it was done for the purpose of making estimates as to the cost, and Mr. Stevens thinks that the material which was deposited was deposited at places from which it will have to be removed, and that estimates based upon those experiments, therefore, are estimates based upon what do not assimilate to the actual work to be done.

Senator HALE. So that it really was not good sample work.

Secretary TAFT. No, sir. Of course the great problem there is not excavation. The great problem is transportation and the disposition of spoil.

Senator HALE. The disposition of what?

Secretary TAFT. Of spoil; of that which is excavated.

Senator TELLER. Dirt.

Secretary TAFT. It will involve transportation all the way from 4 to 14 and 15 miles from Culebra cut.

Senator HALE. By rail?

Secretary TAFT. By rail.

Senator TELLER. How far did he transport it?

Mr. SHONTS. Mr. Wallace, if you will permit me, had exceptional fine weather. He did his work in the dry season. He selected the easy work at the top of the cut, where he had gravity hauls. He wasted it at the nearest place where he could waste it, and misled himself and other people by taking the cost per cubic yard thus arrived at during the most favorable circumstances as being the unit cost at which he could do the entire work. For that reason his work was practically wasted, because on a comprehensive plan——

* * * * * * *

Mr. SHONTS. I understand; I think I can probably answer that. The result of Mr. Wallace's own plant ran from 43 cents per cubic yard in the height of the dry season to a dollar and a half per cubic yard in the worst season.

Senator TELLER. As high as a dollar and a half?

Mr. SHONTS. Yes; his own plant, operated under the same conditions, by his own men; and that is the work we stopped.

Senator TELLER. Will you tell this committee why there is that difference between the excavation in the dry season and in the wet?

Mr. SHONTS. There are a great many elements entering into that. In the first place Mr. Wallace did not go to work correctly.

Senator TELLER. Never mind about Mr. Wallace.

Mr. SHONTS. Well, I must refer to him in order to answer the question, Mr. Senator.

SURVEY OF PUBLIC LANDS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. McENERY. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16307) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have a survey made of unsurveyed public lands in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. CULLOM. It is my purpose to call up the legislative, etc., appropriation bill this morning, but I will yield to the Senator from Louisiana and also to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] before doing so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana asks for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

METROPOLITAN POLICE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16484) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1901.

This is a bill which proposes to make a reasonable increase in the pay of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, and it is important that it should be passed for the reason that if passed the increased items will be placed in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which is now under consideration by the subcommittee.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 3, line 10, before the word "surgeons," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

PAR. 3. The said Metropolitan police force shall consist of one major and superintendent, who shall continue to be invested with such powers and charged with such duties as is provided by existing law; and also of one assistant superintendent, with the rank of inspector; four surgeons for the police and fire departments; three inspectors; ten captains; twelve lieutenants, one of whom shall be harbor master, and such number of sergeants and privates of class 3, privates of class 2, privates of class 1, mounted inspectors, captains, lieutenants, sergeants, and privates on horses and bicycles, and such others as said Commissioners may deem necessary within the appropriations made by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 19, after the word "class," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read:

PAR. 6. The members of the said police force now designated as "desk sergeants" shall cease to be known as such and shall become privates of class 2 from and after the date this act is to take effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after the word "appointment," in line 2, to strike out the following:

Police surgeons shall be members of the said police force and shall be subject to the laws, rules, and regulations for the government, good conduct, discipline, and removal of other officers or members of the said police force. Such police surgeons shall devote their entire time and attention to said police force, attend, without charge, all members of said police force and of the fire department of said District, examine applicants for appointment and retirement in and to said police force and said fire department, and attend such dependent sick and injured, and examine and attend such insane or alleged insane persons as may be taken in charge by said police, and shall perform such other duties as the said Commissioners may direct.

And to insert:

Such police surgeons shall be subject to such laws, rules, and regulations as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may from time to time make, alter, or amend. Such police surgeons shall attend, without charge, all members of said police force and of the fire department of said District, examine applicants for appointment and retirement in and to said police force and said fire department, and attend such dependent sick and injured, and examine and attend such insane or alleged insane persons as may be taken in charge by said police, and shall perform such other duties as the said Commissioners may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 13, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one thousand eight" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Police surgeons shall each receive an annual salary of $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SURVEY OF MARYLAND OYSTER BEDS.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18435) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to cooperate, through the Bureau of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, with the shellfish commissioners of the State of Maryland in making surveys of the natural oyster beds, bars, and rocks in the waters within the State of Maryland, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. RAYNER. It is a matter of urgent necessity that this bill should pass as soon as possible, and I should like to have it put upon its passage now. It was passed unanimously by the House of Representatives.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think it is a meritorious bill and one that should pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I now call up for consideration House bill No. 16472, being the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes; which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations be first acted on as they are reached in the reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Legislative," on page 2, line 17, after the words "assistant secretary," to insert "(Henry M. Rose);" in line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and fifty" and insert "one thousand;" in line 22, after the word "dollars," to strike out "principal clerk, and enrolling clerk, at $2,700 each" and insert "enrolling clerk, $3,000; principal clerk, $2,750;" on page 3, line 3, after the word "dollars," to strike out "and $280 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent;" in line 6, before the word "assistant," to strike out "messenger, acting as;" in line 7, after the word "dollars," to insert "skilled laborer, $900;" and in line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-six thousand five hundred and ninety-six," and insert "seventy-seven thousand seven hundred and sixteen;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of Secretary: For Secretary of the Senate, including compensation as disbursing officer of the contingent fund of the Senate, $5,000, and for compensation as disbursing officer of salaries of Senators, $396; hire of horse and wagon for the Secretary's office, $700; assistant secretary (Henry M. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Executive," on page 34, line 21, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter employees of the Executive Departments and other establishments of the executive branch of the Government may be detailed from time to time to the office of the President of the United States, for such temporary assistance as may be necessary.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what is the necessity and the purpose of the amendment at the bottom of page 34, with reference to the detail of employees to the White House? I presume there is a good reason for it, but at the same time a little explanation will be advantageous. I do not make the inquiry in any spirit of criticism, but for the purpose of obtaining the information. There must be something which has given rise to that amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, this same provision is now in the current law. The President only takes advantage of this provision when the pressure of work in his office is very great, at which times he asks for a detail of a few clerks to help him out. That is all there is to it.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator to say it is in the current law?

Mr. CULLOM. It is.

Mr. BACON. Then why should it be repeated here now?

Mr. CULLOM. It either has to be repeated every year or amended, as we have it in this bill, to provide for the same contingencies hereafter.

Mr. BACON. Oh, that is the purpose—to make permanent what it is the custom to make annual provision for?

Mr. CULLOM. That is the purpose.

Mr. BACON. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 37, line 2, after the word "employees," to insert "herein provided for;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no detail of clerks or other employees from the Executive Departments or other Government establishments in Washington, District of Columbia, to the Civil Service Commission, for the performance of duty in the District of Columbia, shall be made for or during the fiscal year 1907. The Civil Service Commission shall, however, have power to transfer or detail any of its employees herein provided for to or from its office force, field force, or rural carrier examining board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 57, line 1, before the word "watchmen," to strike out "forty" and insert "forty-six;" in line 4, before the word "morning," to strike out "forty-seven" and insert "fifty-two;" in line 6, before the word "laborers," to strike out "fifty-seven" and insert "sixty-five;" in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty-five thousand two hundred and twenty" and insert "sixty-five thousand three hundred and sixty;" in line 10, after the word "services," to insert "in connection with the executive or administrative force," and in line 13, after the word "paragraph," to insert "but this provision shall not prohibit the employment of helpers, laborers, and employees performing clerical work in the several mechanical divisions of the Bureau;" so as to read:

For the following, now authorized and being paid from appropriations for engraving and printing in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, namely: For disbursing agent, $2,400; forty-six watchmen; two forewomen of charwomen, at $540 each; nineteen day charwomen, at $400 each; fifty-two morning and evening charwomen, at $300 each; foremen of laborers, $900; four laborers; sixty-five laborers, at $540 each; in all, $165,360; and no other fund appropriated by this or any other act shall be used for services in connection with the executive or administrative force, in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, of the character specified in this and the foregoing paragraph, but this provision shall not prohibit the employment of helpers, laborers, and employees performing clerical work in the several mechanical divisions of the Bureau.

Mr. BACON. I should like to have the Senator from Illinois give an explanation of the provision on page 57, beginning in line 13, and extending to line 16. I should like to know whether it contemplates the employment of persons outside of the civil-service rules.

Mr. CULLOM. The clause reads:

But this provision shall not prohibit the employment of helpers, laborers, and employees performing clerical work in the several mechanical divisions of the Bureau.

I will read an extract from a communication of Hon. William M. Meredith, Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, on the subject:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING,
April 10, 1906.

SIR: I have the honor to call attention to the item for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, pages 54 and 55, recently passed by the House of Representatives. Provision is made in this item for a number of employees, including clerks, helpers, watchmen, charwomen, and laborers which have heretofore been paid for from the lump appropriation for "Engraving and printing," usually carried in the sundry civil appropriation act.

In addition to providing for these employees in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, this item in the bill as passed by the House of Representatives contains the following restrictive provision:

"And no other fund appropriated by this or any other act shall be used for services, in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, of the character specified in this and the foregoing paragraph."

The information upon which the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives determined the number and classes of the employees which it desired to provide for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was furnished in response to a letter dated February 7, 1906, from Hon. L. N. LITTAUER, in which he requested that the subcommittee in charge of this bill be furnished with "a statement showing the number of clerks and other employees and the present rate of compensation of each additional to those now estimated for in said bill who are employed in the executive or administrative offices of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing * * *." In furnishing this information it was considered that the committee desired the number of such clerks and other employees, including watchmen, cleaners, and charwomen, who were connected with the executive or administrative force of the Bureau, and that its request did not include the employees engaged in the minor clerical work of nor the helpers and laborers connected with the several mechanical divisions of the Bureau.

In its present shape it is feared that the restrictive provision might be construed to prohibit the payment to the employees performing the minor clerical work, as well as the helpers and laborers in these several mechanical divisions, from the appropriation for "Engraving and printing" usually carried in the sundry civil appropriation act. It would seem therefore to be necessary to qualify this restrictive provision by adding after the word "services," in line 9, page 55, the words "connected with the executive or administrative force;" and after the word "paragraph," in line 10, page 55, the words "but this provision shall not prohibit the employment of helpers, laborers, and employees performing clerical work in the several mechanical divisions of the Bureau;" so that the provisions shall read:

Mr. BACON. What the Senator now proposes to read is a part of the bill as amended?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I have glanced over the document from which the Senator is reading, and I think it furnishes an explanation that is sufficient.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 58, line 11, I move to strike out "forty" and insert in lieu thereof "sixty-five;" so as to make the paragraph read:

For freight on bullion and coin, by registered mail or otherwise, between mints and assay offices, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 24, page 97, the last paragraph read containing the items for the Bureau of Navigation.

Mr. CULLOM. I will yield to the Senator from Maine for a moment.

Mr. HALE. In the provision for the Bureau of Navigation, page 97, line 16, I move to strike out "one clerk" and insert "three clerks;" so as to read "three clerks of class 4."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Page 97, line 16, strike out "one clerk" and insert "three clerks;" so as to read "three clerks of class 4."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to change the total in lines 23 and 24 so as to read "$67,940," in lieu of "$64,340."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I ask that a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Navy be printed in the RECORD for the benefit of the committee of conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The communication referred to is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 19, 1906.

SIR: 1. The Department desires to establish a system of identification for the men of the Navy, with a view to preventing the enlisting of undesirable persons, to which cause a large number of desertions is ascribed.

2. After a thorough and careful investigation of the subject, it has been decided to recommend the system in use in the Army, which is also in use by the civil authorities in many of our cities and quite extensively used abroad, known as the "finger-print system."

3. At present the Department has no system, and it is known that many deserters from the service and other undesirable men reenlist. These men are only detected when they reenlist under their own names or become shipmates with those with whom they have been before and are recognized.

4. All the Department needs to put the system into effect is two expert clerks to have charge of the cards, and it asks the aid of the Committee on Naval Affairs to have inserted in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, about to come before the Senate, a provision for two clerks, class 4, under the Navy Department, Bureau of Navigation, making the number three in all—an increase of $3,600.

5. As said above, the Department is convinced that with such a system in force a large number of men who now make fraudulent enlistments, without the knowledge of the Department, would be detected. These fraudulent enlistments are a great charge upon the naval appropriation in the way of outfits of clothing, transportation, pay, etc. Each man detected of fraud would have the outfit furnished, amounting to $45, checked against him, and if only eighty such men were detected in one year the compensation of the additional clerks asked for would be saved through this one item alone. It is confidently believed that the number fraudulently enlisting far exceeds eighty in one year, and the saving to the Government would be appreciable with a proper system of identification in effect.

6. No request for the additional clerical force could be made earlier in order that the matter might have been presented to the Committee on Appropriations, because the Department has only just decided upon the system in question. The request is addressed to the Committee on Naval Affairs, because the Department believes it can materially economize from the start, as far as the naval appropriation is concerned, had it the additional clerical force to put the system into effect.

Respectfully,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 98, line 4, before the word "draftsman," to strike out "assistant;" so as to make the clause read:

Mr. McCREARY. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], in charge of the bill, to the language found on pages 157 and 158, under the heading "Bureau of Immigration," which reads:

Which, together with all other expenses of regulating immigration, shall be paid from the permanent appropriation for expenses of regulating immigration.

Mr. CULLOM. What information does the Senator from Kentucky desire in regard to that?

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to ask the Senator who has charge of the bill what becomes of the immigration fund? There is a large fund, known as the "immigration fund," provided for under existing law, and this bill, in the language I have quoted, seems to provide for the payment of all such expenses out of what is known as the regular immigration appropriation fund.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that is a permanent fund and that these expenses are paid out of it.

Mr. McCREARY. If that is the construction put upon the language, the provision is all right and I am satisfied with it.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no question about it. This has been in existence for a good while.

Mr. McCREARY. Then, as I understand the Senator from Illinois, the immigration fund is included in that language?

Mr. CULLOM. Undoubtedly.

Mr. McCREARY. Very well.

Hereafter the heads of the several Executive Departments and all other officers authorized or required to make estimates for the public service shall include in their annual estimates furnished the Secretary of the Treasury for inclusion in the Book of Estimates all estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year for which they are prepared and submitted, and special or additional estimates for that fiscal year shall only be submitted to carry out laws subsequently enacted or when deemed imperatively necessary for the public service by the Department in which they shall originate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, on page 169, line 1, before the word "in," to strike out "three years" and insert "one year;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. It shall not be lawful hereafter for any clerk or other employee in the classified service in any of the Executive Departments to be transferred from one Department to another Department until such clerk or other employee shall have served for a term of one year in the Department from which he desires to be transferred.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, for the purpose of at least raising the question I move to amend the committee amendment at the top of page 169 by striking out the words "one year" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "six months."

I should like to have the Senator in charge of this bill explain why it is necessary to have section 5 in the bill at all. It has been the custom, I understand, heretofore to give a trial of six months before any clerk can be deemed to be fully under the protection of the civil-service law. That is time enough to give something of a knowledge of the ability of that clerk, and why, at the end of that period, should clerks not be eligible for transfer from one Department to another, as one Department may be in need of clerks and another Department may have a surplusage of them?

I want to call the Senator's attention to another fact, and that is the reason I make the motion to amend and why I ask the Senator from Illinois for information. I understand that the salaries for clerical work are different in the various Departments for practically the same kind of labor, and that it always has been so, or at least has been so for a great many years. Why should a clerk of a certain grade receive, when working in the Patent Office, for the character of work that is there required, from $40 to $45 a month only and for the same character of work in any other Department from $60 to $75 a month? Under this has grown up a system of a great many accepting employment in the Patent Office for a compensation upon which it is impossible for them to live in the city of Washington, where they have to pay their own board. Their only hope is that they can make a sacrifice for a given number of months, until they can get a transfer to a Department where they will be paid living wages.

For my part, I do not understand why any employee should be forced to perform clerical service in the Patent Office for $40 a month while for the same kind of service in another Department $75 a month is paid. If the salaries for the same class of labor were raised to practically the same amount, so that they would be similar in all the Departments, then there might be some reason for compelling clerks to remain in one Department for one or for three years; but so long as one Department or bureau of that Department is used as an introductory stage by a great many who desire to get Government employment it seems to me that we ought to give them an opportunity to be transferred where they can receive living wages.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I have stated to the Senator in charge of the bill that I desired to raise a point of order on the amendment at the top of page 168, but I understand the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is very anxious to have that amendment retained, and, in his absence, I certainly would not want to press the point and I would not want to delay the bill. So I give notice that I do not care to make the point of order.

Mr. CULLOM. In answer to the Senator from North Dakota I will say that section 5 is an original section inserted by the House of Representatives, as the Senator will see. The House fixed the time at three years within which a clerk could not be transferred. The Senate committee thought that that was an extremely long time, and so we cut it down to one year.

Of course, as suggested by the Senator, there are reasons that make it seem very hard to keep a man in the employ of one Department when by being transferred to another he would get twice as much pay, but that is always so in the Departments. They do not all pay alike. In one Department more is frequently paid for a certain class of work than is paid in others. There is a disposition, as we all know, on the part of clerks to be dissatisfied wherever they may be. They want promotion, or they want to be transferred from one Department to another, and they sometimes become very annoying to the heads of the Departments in making their applications. So it seemed to the Committee on Appropriations on the part of the Senate that one year perhaps would not be an extravagant time; but so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to making it six months, if that will be satisfactory to the Senator, and I am willing to allow such an amendment to be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 6, on page 169, line 7, after the words "District of Columbia," to insert "except those officers and employees whose details are now specially provided by law;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. Hereafter it shall be unlawful to detail civil officers, clerks, or other subordinate employees who are authorized or employed under or paid from appropriations made for the military or naval establishments, or any other branch of the public service outside of the District of Columbia, except those officers and employees whose details are now specially provided by law, for duty in any bureau, office, or other division of any Executive Department in the District of Columbia, except temporary details for duty connected with their respective offices.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to an amendment which I wish to offer.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator wait one moment?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 3, line 7, I move to amend the amendment of the committee, before the word "hundred," by striking out "nine" and inserting "twelve;" so that it will read "twelve hundred dollars."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Chair will regard the amendment as open to amendment. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Illinois to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 7, it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "nine" and inserting "twelve."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. The total should be corrected. I move, on page 3, line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-seven thousand seven hundred" and insert "seventy-eight thousand;" so that it will read: "seventy-eight thousand and sixteen dollars."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 18, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "seventy-seven thousand seven hundred" and inserting "seventy-eight thousand."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, on page 149, line 14, I move to strike out the word "thirty" and insert "sixty;" and after the word "Congress," in line 16, I move to add the following:

And to report as to the opportunities for and the obstacles against the enlargement of our export trade in cotton goods, the kinds and qualities of goods in demand, the shipping facilities, freight rates, and the commercial and financial agencies necessary for the successful competition of our cotton manufacturers and exporters in foreign trade; to collect full lines of the standard specimens of all cotton products consumed there, to exhibit them in the different cotton industrial centers of the United States, classified, labeled, and arranged for exhibition, with complete information as to the countries in which they are produced, wholesale and retail prices, the patterns in demand by different localities and by different classes of consumers, and the essential conditions of competition to be met in each market for each kind of goods.

Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to what I am about to say. I do not propose to say much upon this subject at the present time, but simply state a few facts. At the beginning of the present session the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] introduced a bill appropriating the sum of $75,000 for the purpose of extending our cotton trade in the Orient. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] also introduced a bill carrying a large appropriation for that purpose, and I myself introduced a bill to appoint a world market commission, to extend our cotton market in foreign countries. All three of those bills were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and by that committee referred to the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and I desire to read what he says about this matter. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the fact that the Secretary has recommended this legislation.

The following associations have also unanimously indorsed this movement:

The Southern Cotton Growers' Association;
The American Cotton Manufacturers' Association;
The Texas Cotton Manufacturers' Association;
The Georgia Industrial Association;
The Interstate Cotton Seed Crushers' Association;
The Cotton Seed Oil Superintendents' Association;
The Memphis Cotton Exchange;
The New York Cotton Exchange;
The Southern Soft Yarn Spinners' Association;
The Southern Hard Yarn Spinners' Association;
The New England Cotton Manufacturers' Association;
The legislature of the State of Georgia, last August; and
The Alabama Commercial and Industrial Association.

These three bills were referred to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and his letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
Washington, March 7, 1906.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR FRYE: I have your letter of the 15th ultimo in regard to bills of the Senate, Nos. 36, 409, and 2827, relating to the appointment of a commission to investigate trade conditions in foreign markets, especially with reference to cotton products, and which are now before the Committee on Commerce for consideration. In response to requests from the committee, my views on the general merits and advisability of favorable action on these several bills were expressed in communications dated January 5 and 12, respectively.

Further reflection upon the subject-matter strengthens the conviction that while the work proposed in these several bills would be of great value, it could be better accomplished and more efficiently performed, and at much less expense, if assigned to the Department of Commerce and Labor.

These bills were to establish a commission, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor says it can be better and more cheaply performed by his Department, and I have adopted his recommendation in that regard:

The cultivation and manufacture of cotton is the leading industry of the United States. We supply seven-tenths of the raw material, of which 30 per cent is used in home consumption, 9 per cent is held in stock, and 61 per cent is exported. The latter is manufactured into yarn and cloth by the foreign purchasers and sold in the world's markets to the approximate value of $800,000,000, of which immense aggregate the manufacturers of the United States participate only to the value of $60,000,000.

Here we have our raw cotton going abroad, to be manufactured there, to the extent of $800,000,000, and we manufacture only about $60,000,000 worth.

I call attention to this language of the Secretary:

How to increase our share in this great and steadily expanding trade is a problem confronting our planters and manufacturers, the solution of which deeply concerns our domestic welfare and industrial prosperity and our commercial influence in foreign markets. Any plans, therefore, presenting reasonable grounds for success, especially when they emanate from and have the deliberate approval of those directing the great industry involved, are entitled to the most careful consideration.

The study of foreign markets is essential to the promotion of the object in view, and I believe the services of those expert in the manufacture and marketing of cotton products would be valuable in this connection. I do not, however, believe the work contemplated can be accomplished by employing experts alone, which seem to be the aim and purpose of the bills under consideration. It has been demonstrated by the experience of our commercial rivals, confirmed by voluminous testimony of our consular officers and special agents, and by individuals who have studied foreign markets, that recognition of existing conditions, methods of conducting business, habits and tastes of the people, their preferences, prejudices, and superstitions is infinitely more important than expert inquiry into, or previously acquired knowledge of, the technics of manufacture.

In this connection and by way of illustration, I invite your attention to the reports of the special agents sent to China and Japan by the Department of Commerce and Labor under authority of the act of February 3, 1905. These reports were published in Daily Consular and Trade Reports during the month of January, and were given wide circulation among business men and the newspaper press, from whom they received generous commendation. They were consolidated and reproduced in the January number of Monthly Consular and Trade Reports, and, in compliance with popular demand, have been issued as a separate pamphlet. These reports convey the class of information and answer fully the inquiries described in the bills under consideration. Every physical, ethical, and commercial condition existing in China having relation to the marketing of cotton fabrics is not only fully set forth in the reports of the Department's special agents, but photographs are furnished illustrating certain conditions of the highest importance to our business men, and samples are supplied of every kind of cotton fabrics successfully sold in Chinese markets. The descriptions and the samples themselves furnish material that can be utilized by technical experts at home, and these, combined with the pertinent facts with which the reports abound, persistently followed by those in charge of factories making cotton goods for the markets of the Orient, will very materially promote the sale of American cotton fabrics in those markets.

While fully sympathizing with and desirous of securing the object contemplated in the pending bills, I do not believe their enactment necessary. The Department of Commerce and Labor was established to do what is contemplated by the proposed legislation, and although the work of fostering, promoting, and developing the various manufacturing industries of the United States "and markets for the same at home and abroad, domestic and foreign," has been retarded by inadequate facilities, the results obtained are encouraging and give assurance that if the Congress shall provide the necessary means to carry out the expressed mandate of the act creating the Department of Commerce and Labor, with the cooperation of our manufacturers and merchants the Department will become the active agency by which all the great interests committed to its care will be promoted at home and extended abroad.

If the Committee on Commerce shall determine to provide for the appointment of experts to make special inquiry into the export trade in cotton products, it is respectfully suggested that this may be accomplished through the medium of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and without establishing, as provided in the pending bills, what would be practically an unnecessary and costly governmental department, independent of the Department of Commerce and Labor, which was organized by Congress for the specific purpose of developing our foreign commerce. In adition to making provision for continuing the investigations authorized by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1906, I recommend that like provision be made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the coming year for the appointment of three experts to inquire into the export trade in cotton products, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and to whom reports shall be made.

Very respectfully,

V. H. METCALF, Secretary.

Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate, nor to make a speech upon this question. I have read the Secretary's letter showing that I have done exactly what he recommends. I have given up for the present the idea of having a commission, because commissions seem to be unpopular at this particular time. The Secretary says it will be less expensive to do the work through his Department. Adopting the suggestion made in his letter, I introduced an amendment to this bill for an appropriation of $75,000 to carry out the objects of this proposed legislation—not for $100,000, nor for $200,000, but for $75,000 only, and it seems the committee refused to consider it favorably.

Mr. President, the cotton growers of the United States add to the wealth of this country every year more than $600,000,000. They send abroad 7,000,500 bales of cotton. They bring back to this country from foreign markets $400,000,000 in gold. It seems to me that when the cotton grower and the cotton manufacturer asks for this appropriation we ought to grant it, in order that there may be an investigation and study of conditions with a view of increasing our export trade. There is a bill now pending before Congress to remove the tax from denaturized alcohol, and this bill will probably become a law. A few days ago I received a letter containing a bundle of artificial silk manufactured in France out of our raw cotton by a treatment of ethyl alcohol. Not a Senator upon this floor, unless he is an expert, could distinguish this from the real silk. We want our experts to know how these things are done; we want them to know how to make silk out of cotton; we want them to explain the process to our manufacturers, so that we can make it here out of the raw material which lies at our very doors.

The writer of this letter says further:

This company, with a capital of $950,000, has been formed for the purpose of establishing a plant in the United States for manufacturing artificial silk like the samples I am going to show you, provided legislation is enacted by Congress under which grain or ethyl alcohol may be used free of tax.

Our factory will give employment to at least 1,200 to 1,500 hands, and will turn out about 4,000 pounds of silk a day. Artificial silk is made of raw cotton treated in a certain way by alcohol, therefore large quantities of both cotton and alcohol would be used by us. As an indication of our requirements, I may say that about one and one-half gallons of alcohol go to a pound of silk; thus our consumption of alcohol would be 6,000 gallons a day.

In the event of favorable legislation by Congress, that is, with free alcohol for our industry, we would be able to produce the silk at a price that would bring it within the purchasing power of thousands of people who can not afford its use at the present.

I feel confident that in time there will be an annual production and consumption in this country of several million pounds. Besides, such markets as Japan and China could be supplied from here instead of their having to get the finished product from Europe, as is now the case.

I am informed also that billiard balls and celluloid goods of all kinds are made in Europe out of raw cotton by means of similar treatment. All of these articles ought to be manufactured in this country. While $800,000,000 of manufactured cotton goods made in Europe out of the products we raise are sold in the markets of the world, we manufacture only about $60,000,000. It is shameful that our cotton should be taken to other countries to be spun and woven into cloth and made into a hundred different useful articles, while we with the raw material at our very doors neglect our opportunities.

We have hitherto made the mistake of depending too much on one or two markets, instead of seeking and securing a market wherever there is a consuming demand. We had barely begun to enlarge our producing capacities to supply the Chinese markets, in 1902 and 1903, when the disturbances in the Far East put a sudden check to our exports of cotton cloths to that quarter of the globe.

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor, in his report for 1904, says:

FALL IN EXPORTS OF COTTON GOODS TO CHINA.

A strongly marked characteristic of the trade with China in the year just ended was a reduction in the exports of cotton goods from the United States to that country. The total value of cotton cloths exported to China in the fiscal year 1904 was but $4,090,952, against $13,689,860 in 1903 and $16,382,698 in 1902. In quantity the reduction is still more striking, the total number of yards of cotton cloth exported from the United States to China in 1904 being 76,886,534, against 277,671,500 in 1903 and 335,327,764 in 1902. This falling off in exports of American cotton goods to China is due in some degree to the excessively high prices of cotton during the last year, but chiefly to the general reduction in imports of cotton goods into that country and especially that section which has been the scene of hostilities during the year. Northern China has been, in recent years, the especial field for American cotton goods entering that country, and the reports from Newchwang have shown a rapid growth during recent years in American cottons reaching that port from Shanghai, to which most of the cotton goods leaving the United States for China is consigned. The reports of Sir Robert Hart, the head of the Chinese customs service, indicate a general reduction in imports of cotton goods into China, except those from Japan, but it is apparent from an examination of the official statistics that the United States has suffered a greater reduction proportionately than other nations, and this is apparently due to the fact that the field which is supplied has been the one most affected by the hostilities. Official figures of the United Kingdom show that the total value of cotton goods exported to China in 1903 was £4,691,057, against £5,448,130 in 1902. The shipments of piece goods from India to China in the year ending March 31, 1904, amounted to 1,118,091 pieces, against 2,609,416 pieces in the preceding year. Japan, however, is the one country which seems to have suffered no loss in the cotton trade of China, but increased in some instances its shipments to that market. The shipments of gray shirtings from Japan to China in 1903 were 10,349,248 yards, against 8,864,888 yards in the preceding year, and of T-cloths 10,549,508 yards in 1903, against 10,227,026 yards in the preceding year. In cotton yarns the figures for 1903 are materially in excess of those of 1902, the total value of cotton yarns exported from Japan to China in 1903 being 28,338,367 yen, against 17,495,929 yen in 1902, while measured by quantity the increase is equally striking.

The mischievous effects of having to depend upon a single area to take our mills' products is seen, therefore, not only in loss of sales and temporary depression, but likewise in the opportunity which it gives to other producers to take advantage of conditions and capture the market for themselves, so that when we come back we find our rivals in possession.

The war in the East was followed closely by the general boycott in China against our products. Whether this boycott ever did much harm may be questioned, but it can not be deemed that it was not taken advantage of by Japanese, German, and British traders in cotton goods to strengthen their hold upon the market in which the southern and northern manufacturers had come to feel that they had a promising future.

How this promising trade was obtained by our cotton manufacturers, what kind of goods this market requires, what is the nature and the degree of competition which have to be met, on what terms the market can be held permanently, and what obstacles are to be removed in order to improve our chances of success—these are the questions that have to be answered, not only for the Far East, but just as fully and as clearly for the near East, for South and Central America, for Australia, for Africa, and for our two great North American neighbors, Mexico and Canada.

If in each one of these great consuming countries we can succeed in establishing a demand for our cotton fabrics by adaptation to their respective requirements, as no doubt by proper inquiry we can, then the failure of any single market like that of China in the years 1903–4 can not bring our mills to the verge of suspension, but the loss in one quarter may be made good in whole or in part at least by gains in another, and an even level of prosperity be insured by our textile industries, for which cotton manufacturing is by far the leader. It is the even tenor of industry that gives happiness and contentment to the people, prevents the evils of social and political discontent from taking root, and gives to the consumer that constancy of purchasing power in the home market that makes for the prosperity of the farmers, the merchants, the manufacturer, and the carrier alike. But only on a broader basis of sales throughout the world, only by an expansion of our trade beyond the limits within which the attitude of a single people can paralyze our prosperity can such consummation be achieved.

That is what the southern cotton manufacturer demands, and has a right to demand; this is what the New England manufacturer requires, and has a right to require, not simply on their own account, but on account of the vast national interests which are dependent upon the cotton industry from the planting of the seed until the cloth passes over the counter to the foreign consumer.

But let us take the cotton manufacturing industry alone. It ranks second among our great industries in the average number of wage-earners employed; fifth in the rank of wages paid and in capital invested, and sixth in the net value of its products. So closely interwoven with the prosperity of the southern and eastern people of this country is the manufacture of cotton that irregular markets and uncertain demands for the output of the mills would probably cause more loss to the national income than in the case of any other industry, not even excepting the iron and steel industry. For the cotton industry is still one of those widely distributed industries, having its mills scattered among numerous communities where economical life is closely connected with that of the cotton mill. Especially in the South there are hundreds of localities in which the cotton mill has gathered thousands of white families from their little farms into the factory villages. They have, many of them forever, ceased to live the self-sufficing life of the farm, but have, like the English hand-loom weaver a century ago, promptly answered the clarion call of progress in the industrial evolution of the new South. They are there to-day, faithfully working out their part in the newer destiny of the old Southland; and we demand that the prosperity of these people, who have in them a new element of power for the nation in its competitive struggle with other nations, shall not be left dependent for their welfare upon the whim of a Chinese boycott or of a single war in any one portion of the trading world. We demand that those who are responsible for industrial leadership, in the North as well as in the South, shall have placed at their disposal every factor of commercial policy which may in any essential way contribute to their mastery of the problems which involve the continuous prosperity of our people. How can this best be done? How may the National Government not only prevent depressions but also promote enterprise? By giving to the people thus responsible for prosperity the widest possible opportunity to help themselves. We must put our manufacturers, both large and small, in possession of the knowledge that will enable them to command the export market situation.

The large corporation, with its millions of capital, may possibly not need so much the aid of such a commission as is here proposed. The large corporation can send its own special agents, if it will; but the smaller manufacturer has an equal right to independent access to the world market, and it is for him that the resources of knowledge are especially needed, so that he may share on equal terms in the prosperity which depends upon such an acquaintance with conditions of trade. To fail to put the independent manufacturer in possession of these resources would speedily result in driving these many mills into consolidations, a result which at this stage of the South's industrial evolution especially would in all probability arrest the development of the types of industrial talent which the existing scale of industry is developing.

This appropriation asked for by the cotton growers and cotton manufacturers is comparatively a mere pittance, and I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment. This country should spin and weave its own cotton instead of sending it to England, France, and Germany. We should sell the finished products in the markets of the world and reap the rich rewards that now go to the factories of Europe. In the great commercial struggle we have every advantage on our side. Having almost a monopoly of the raw material, with every natural advantage and facility for its manufacture, we will, with proper encouragement, secure and hold our share of the world's trade, and the wealth of this country will be increased a thousandfold.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from North Carolina and I agree upon one proposition, that this is legislation, and that being so, I raise the point of order on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is clearly of opinion that the amendment contravenes the fixed rule of the Senate, and is not in order.

Mr. CARTER. On page 6, line 4, after the word "Departments," I move to amend by inserting the word "Manufactures."

Mr. CULLOM. The motion of course means that the salary of the clerk of the Committee on Manufactures is to be raised to twenty-two hundred and twenty dollars.

Mr. CARTER. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. President, I desire to say a word on this subject. The effect of this amendment will be as stated by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] in charge of the bill. I make the motion at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Manufactures, who is temporarily absent from the Senate on account of illness. I understand the fact to be that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], the chairman of that committee, has been compelled, in order to secure the efficient service necessary, to make payment from his private funds in order to carry on the work of the committee and likewise his work as a Senator. I believe it is one of the committees sufficiently active to warrant the $2,220 per year provided for in this particular paragraph of the bill. I think it is just that the transfer be made, and I make the motion for the absent Senator at his request, believing it is meritorious.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I do not know any instance in the list of committees where I should feel more like accommodating the chairman of the committee than in this case. The chairman is now, and has been for some time, ill at his home. But I want to say to the Senator from Montana that we find a very great state of inequality with respect to clerkships and the services allotted to each Senator. It is obvious that some arrangement should be made, perhaps through a committee, by which the services rendered to each Senator, whether in charge of a committee or otherwise, should be equalized, so as to remove the difficulty and feeling of inequality that exist to-day.

We have given considerable attention to this subject, and we find, for instance, that $117,000 is now expended in the employment of clerks by resolutions. A condition exists which makes it necessary that all these things should be taken up by some special committee, created for that purpose, in order to equalize the services rendered to each chairman and each Senator, and to remove the complaints we now hear every day.

I trust that the Senator from Montana, in view of this state of things, and in the hope that we may work it out so that there shall be no complaint on the part of any Senator, will withdraw his motion for the present. It seems to me it would be better to leave the matter so that it can be taken up and the whole subject overhauled, getting rid of the employment of clerks, etc., by resolution, and allot to each Senator whatever service he ought to have as a Senator in the performance of his duty.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it is obvious that the statement of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is based upon substantial foundation. That great discrepancies do exist in the matter of the payment of employees connected with the Senate is beyond question. I believe that as a rule men of ability, equal to the discharge of the important duties that fall to the clerks of committees and clerks to Senators, are inadequately compensated by the Senate. It must be borne in mind that as a rule a secretary to a Senator or the clerk of a committee is not only required to perform service here during the session of Congress, but must, at his own expense, pay travel charges for himself and family to his home at the adjournment of Congress. In the case of the Senator from Idaho, the clerk of the committee, being required to pay his own expenses for a distance of 3,000 miles to his home, in order there to continue the service the Senator requires, and then to pay his expenses 3,000 miles back to the Capitol next autumn, is, after subtracting the amount thus paid out, allowed very meager compensation for his services.

I trust that when this adjustment occurs due regard will be paid to the ability of the men, the faithful and efficient services they render, and the expense unavoidably attached to the performance of their duties at the Capitol and at their respective homes. I know of many clerks of Senators and clerks of committees in this body possessed of abilities which would command in any outside occupation in the business world a very much larger compensation than they receive here. Senators' clerks and committee clerks as a rule are men of genuine ability, high accomplishments, and of unquestionable fidelity to the public interest. The increase made from fifteen hundred to eighteen hundred dollars per year for the secretaries of Senators of the minority——

Mr. CULLOM. Made in this bill.

Mr. CARTER. Is an allowance that stops short of justice. I think these clerks should receive at least $2,000 a year, and that no man who is fit to be a clerk to a Senator—capable of assisting in the transaction of the business of a great State—should be asked to work for practically his board and clothes. At this capital it is almost impossible for a man of family—and most of the clerks of committees and clerks of Senators have families—to support himself and family and dress decently and keep even on the meager salary of $2,000 per year.

I know that as to a Senator, calculating by personal experience, the board bill in the city of Washington is generally measured by the full sum of the salary received. At some of the hotels in the city of Washington they take it, as a matter of course, that the salary of a Senator is but an incident to his general income. He is expected to pay for his personal accommodations more than the salary received. With the clerks of committees or the secretaries of Senators the same rule applies, and I do not believe the public at large expect capable men to work at the Capitol, discharging onerous and responsible duties, without fair compensation. I verily believe that the clerical force of the United States Senate is inadequately compensated and has been paid too small a pittance for the services performed for many, many years past.

In nearly every avenue of employment throughout the country salaries and wages have been greatly increased of late years. This is but a response to the increased cost of living. I have no doubt the cost of living in the city of Washington to-day is 25 to 40 per cent higher than it was fifteen years ago. And yet the salaries of our people, the salaries of Senators and Representatives, remain unchanged. I think, in the matter of the compensation of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, an important duty has been long neglected through moral cowardice. We all know that the salaries received are not, as a rule, sufficient to pay the ordinary expenses of the Senator. If you will add to the expenses in the city of Washington the unavoidable expenses encountered elsewhere and in travel, it will be found, I think, that no Senator receives from the Government anything like the amount he is compelled to pay out in the course of his service. This condition should be remedied. I believe a bill should be passed by the terms whereof those who vote upon it may not, during their present term, receive any special benefit from the legislation, but that those elected hereafter shall be paid something like reasonable expenses, at least.

What applies to Senators and Members certainly applies to the clerical force in the two establishments. There are clerks of committees in this body who could, for service of like responsibility, obtain double the amount we pay, and many of those gentlemen are practically indispensable to the conduct of the business of the Senate and in the training of new men to take up the duties where they may ultimately leave them off.

I do not feel disposed to press this motion, because I do not deem it wise to disturb a wholesome purpose for general readjustment of salaries in the Senate, and in order to avoid precipitating that question before the Senate is prepared to deal with it in its entirety, I am content to and do withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana withdraws his motion.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suppose the reason why my amendment was declared out of order is that I added certain words to show the purpose of the appropriation. That made it out of order. Therefore, I move now to strike out the word "thirty" and insert the word "sixty" on page 149, line 14. It simply increases the appropriation without stating what it is for. In that view of the case I should think it would be in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 149, line 14, after the words "United States," strike out "thirty" and insert "sixty;" so that if amended it will read "$60,000."

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will, with the approval of the Senate, accept the amendment. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate to add to any extent to what has already been said by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], but it does seem to me that this is an item which would appeal to the sense of the Senate as one eminently proper to be incorporated in this bill. The facts are set out by the letter of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, from which the Senator from North Carolina has read. The important fact stated is that of this immense crop a very small percentage is marketed in foreign markets by domestic manufacturers. Not only the manufacturers but the producers of raw cotton are interested in extending the foreign markets for all cotton products. As stated by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor—and I presume he has accurately informed himself upon the subject—the manufactured products, including cotton yarn, made abroad from the cotton we ship there aggregate $800,000,000 a year, while the part of American manufacture which is shipped abroad is only $60,000,000.

The purpose of the amendment is to have investigations made which will aid in opening markets for the products of cotton as manufactured in this country and for raw cotton as well. This bill has an item in it in which it is contemplated to appropriate $30,000 generally for the purpose of opening markets, providing—

> For compensation, at not more than $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses, of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States.

So the specific object is thus recognized as a proper one in this bill. The purpose in regard to the particular product is one recognized by the terms of this provision as proper as to all products. Here is a particular product which, according to the information given us by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, is very much in need of an investigation for the purpose of enabling the producers of this article to find markets abroad, to open for them widely the avenues of trade.

Mr. President, if there is any one single product which ought to have the considerate favor of Congress in that regard it is the cotton product, and on that line I simply want to add a word to what has been so well said by the Senator from North Carolina on this subject.

In the first place, the balance of trade, and particularly the gold balance, would have been overwhelmingly against the United States during the greater part of the past forty years if it had not been for the cotton crop. The cotton crop is essentially a gold crop, and every pound of it which goes abroad represents its value in gold in return. Every pound of it that goes abroad either brings gold to this country or, by furnishing the equivalent of gold in exchange, prevents gold from going out, which is practically the same thing.

As I have previously had occasion to say to the Senate, the amount of the cotton crop in its unmanufactured raw state which goes abroad, excluding the amount of raw cotton which is consumed by our factories at home, represents every year more than all the gold, and is the direct equivalent of more than all the gold, that is produced in all the mines of all the world in that year. All the gold that is produced in the world in the whole of each year is considerably less than the amount of gold represented by the raw cotton that is each year shipped from this country abroad. The equivalent in gold of the raw cotton that goes abroad each year is nearly if not quite 50 per cent more than all the gold that is dug in all the world in a year, and it represents and preserves that much in the way of the gold balance of the United States. Raw cotton is the largest single article of export of all articles exported from this country, whether of manufactures, mining, or agriculture, and is therefore more potential than any other single article of export in preserving our gold balance. Other products of manufacture and agriculture are in the main consumed at home, and therefore do not bring the gold into the country. Besides this, the cotton crop performs a most important public function in the increase in the wealth of the country, which reaches all the various trades directly or indirectly throughout the land.

But there is another important point to which I wish to ask the attention of Senators, and especially those who believe in legislation for the encouragement and protection of domestic industries. Here is this great and important industry, important not only to those directly engaged in it, but important either directly or indirectly to every man, woman, and child in the United States in that which adds to the prosperity of the country, and particularly in the great office which it performs in the keeping of the proper gold balance on our side in our trade relations.

It is impossible for this Government by any enactment to materially aid this great industry in the production of cotton, by any of the peculiar class of legislation to which I refer, where not only millions but hundreds of millions of dollars every year go to other industries by reason of the legislation along the lines which I have indicated. There is not one single dollar by reason of any legislation of the United States that can come to those who produce raw cotton.

The demand for this appropriation is not found in simply this information from the Department of Commerce and Labor, but also in the call of those engaged in this business in their conventions, and all have appealed to Congress for the inauguration of this important work.

I wish to ask the Senator from Illinois if in the face of the declared policy of this country by which hundreds of millions of dollars, and even a thousand million dollars, as can be shown, directly and indirectly, accrues in benefits to other industries by reason of the legislation of the country, shall it be said that when the small pittance of $30,000 is asked for directly on the line of what is recognized in this paragraph of the bill as a proper appropriation, Congress will say no to it? The fact is that this amount is altogether too small, but in the face of the opposition to an appropriation for this purpose it is better to secure even this small amount to inaugurate a beginning of the work.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senator will agree to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$60,000," in order to enable the Department of Commerce and Labor to go on with this investigation, which the Secretary himself writes here is one which can be advantageously undertaken and which should be undertaken.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, there have been pending before the Senate Committee on Commerce during the present session three separate bills in relation to the very matter which is now under discussion. Each one of the bills provided for a commission, all the way from three to five and perhaps nine in number, who should be empowered to visit countries abroad and pursue this investigation, practically taking it from the direction of the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor. All of those bills were finally referred to a subcommittee, and that subcommittee has not made any report. I am satisfied, however, if there had been simply this proposition before the Committee on Commerce, to appropriate $30,000 to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for this investigation, the committee would have unanimously reported in favor of it; and I hope that the Senator from Illinois will consent that $30,000 may be added to the appropriation in the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I rose before the Senator from Maine asked to say a word to suggest to the Senator from Georgia and also to the Senator from North Carolina——

Mr. OVERMAN. Let me interrupt the Senator. I have no doubt the Committee on Commerce will report unanimously on this proposition, and it is only a question of delay. I am willing to take the smaller sum, but I want the words to go in as in my original amendment to show that the cotton men of the South have been recognized in this matter in a small manner. I should like those words to be added increasing it to $60,000 and let the other words show for what purpose.

Mr. CULLOM. I would rather not do that because it makes it out of order. I wish to say in addition that the estimate is only $50,000, and the Senator is here asking for $60,000. There is now $30,000 in the bill for foreign examinations, etc., and if you add $30,000 you go beyond the estimate.

What I was going to suggest is that I am entirely willing to allow $50,000 as the total—that is, to give $20,000 more than is provided in the bill, and without any further discussion on the subject, if this is agreeable to the gentlemen interested.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well; let it go.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator from North Carolina consents to that, although he says, as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor recommends, $30,000 is the proper amount to be added, and I would be very glad to get that, if practicable.

Mr. CLAY. My colleague is mistaken in making an estimate of $50,000. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor had no reference to the appropriation stated by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know that he had.

Mr. CLAY. That $50,000 was simply a sum he asked to carry out the present law, and if this appropriation is increased from $30,000 to $50,000 and stops there without any other provision, there is no existing law directing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to apply the $20,000 for the purpose set forth by the Senator from North Carolina and the $50,000 will then simply be applied to carrying out the general purposes of the existing law.

Mr. CULLOM. Of course that will be so; and there is no reason why it should not be applied to investigations of the cotton interest as well as any other interest.

Mr. BACON. I understand that, but I think there ought to be something to indicate that this addition has been made by Congress with a special view to this particular investigation.

So far as the suggestion made by my colleague is concerned, I have no doubt he is correct. He is on that committee and is familiar with the subject, and I took it up on the wing, as it were. I was mistaken as to the recommendation of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. CULLOM. The provision in the bill is "for compensation, at not more than $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses, of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting foreign commerce with the United States, $30,000," etc.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CULLOM. First I want to say that last year we had quite a struggle over this very provision. I wanted to have $50,000 appropriated in the bill then, but we were cut down finally to $30,000. I have no objection to raising this amount to the estimate, but I do not see that we can go beyond the estimate.

Mr. BACON. I would have the Senator go one step further. This provision is for an investigation to be made "with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States." It seems to me that it would not be in contravention of the rule when we add the $20,000 to specify a particular article of commerce, because it would be included in the general language and be directly in line with the general intent of the provision. So I hope that the Senator will accept the original phraseology proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. CULLOM. What was the original phraseology the Senator suggested?

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it be read from the desk.

Mr. BACON. It seems to me that it is directly in harmony with the other provisions of the paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's proposed amendment has been taken to the Reporters' room.

Mr. OVERMAN. I proposed to add these words——

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator had better let the provision go in as it is with the additional appropriation, and if there is any——

Mr. BACON. Let the Senator from Illinois hear the Senator from North Carolina read his amendment. I think it will make it all right.

Mr. OVERMAN. Here are the words I suggested. To add after the last line in the paragraph, after the word "Congress," in the clause requiring report to be made to Congress:

And report as to the opportunities for and the obstacles against the enlargement of our export trade in cotton goods, the kinds and qualities of goods in demand, the shipping facilities, freight rates, and the commercial and financial agencies necessary for the successful competition of our cotton manufacturers and exporters in foreign trade; to collect full lines of the standard specimens of all cotton products consumed there, to exhibit them in the different cotton mill and industrial centers of the United States, classified, labeled, and arranged for exhibition, with complete information as to the countries in which they are produced, wholesale and retail prices, the patterns in demand by different localities and by different classes of consumers, and the essential conditions of competition to be met in each market for each kind of goods.

Mr. CULLOM. I can not consent to allow that amendment to be made.

Mr. BACON. I would suggest, in the interest of brevity, that after striking out "$30,000" and inserting "$50,000" we add the words "$20,000 of which to be used in investigations of markets for cotton products."

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. It is the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina as modified.

The SECRETARY. On page 149, line 14, before the word "thousand," strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty;" and after the word "dollars" insert "$20,000 of which to be used in investigations of markets for cotton products."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois, in charge of the bill, to the item on page 118, which I do not exactly understand. It is in the appropriation for the Pension Office. I see that the bill as passed by the House provided, in line 5, for "thirty-two medical examiners, who shall be surgeons of education, skill, and experience in their profession, at $1,800 each." The Senate committee has stricken out "thirty-two" and inserted "thirty-eight," and that amendment has been agreed to.

Now I go to line 14, on page 118, where the bill as it passed the House provided for "ten assistant chiefs of division, at $1,800 each," and the Senate strikes out "ten" and increases the number to eighteen. It is difficult for me to understand why it becomes necessary to increase the medical examiners from thirty-two to thirty-eight and to increase the assistant chiefs from ten to eighteen.

Mr. CULLOM. As a matter of fact the proposition as it now stands in the bill is exactly as it is in the law. Thirty-eight is exactly the number the law now provides for.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator means that the House saw fit to reduce the number from thirty-eight to thirty-two and the Senate committee restored that number?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; the committee put it back; that is all.

Mr. CLAY. And the Senator also means to say that, in line 14, heretofore eighteen assistant chiefs of division were employed and the House struck out "eighteen" and inserted "ten?"

Mr. CULLOM. The truth is that they had twenty before, and we made it eighteen after hearing the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. CLAY. That may explain it, but I am frank to say that I was unable to see why there had been an increase of nearly double the amount.

Mr. CULLOM. It is not an increase, but a slight reduction.

Mr. CLAY. The House decreased it, but the Senate put it back to what it was before.

Mr. CULLOM. That is substantially what was done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. PETTUS. I move to amend, on pages 10 and 11, under the head of "Capitol police," by striking out the first amendment and restoring the text as it came from the House. As it came from the House all the private policemen were paid the same price. As it came from the committee of the Senate there were three classes, undefined classes, but numbered. It seems to me that, as this is a Government where the head is in favor of a "square deal," it would be best to have all these private policemen paid the same price, and I move to restore the text as it came from the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole on the bottom of page 10 and the top of page 11. Shall the Senate concur in that amendment?

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. MILLARD. I offer an amendment to the bill and ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 23, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert "clerk to Committee on Interoceanic Canals, at $2,220; one assistant clerk, at $1,800," and on page 6, line 1, after the word "Cuba," strike out the words "Interoceanic Canals."

Mr. CULLOM. Has the committee now more than one clerk?

Mr. MILLARD. There is an assistant clerk at $1,400, and I will state——

Mr. KEAN. The assistant clerk is employed under a resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. MILLARD. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. I dislike very much to oppose the Senator in the increase of salary to $1,800, but there are many cases of the same kind. Possibly this clerk has a little more to do just now on the Interoceanic Canals Committee than some other clerks who want an increase, but to interfere with these resolution clerks it would be necessary that the resolution under which the clerk of the committee is employed should be repealed, so as not to get mixed up in the matter of drawing pay. I think the Senator had better withhold any action on the resolution at this session until, as I said before, we can take up these things by some special committee and equalize the salaries of the employees of the Senate.

Mr. MILLARD. I will say that in this case there is no reason for the increase of the salary of the clerk, whose present salary is sufficient; but the assistant clerk is now receiving only $1,400 a year.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will introduce a resolution amending his own resolution under which the clerk is employed he might get an increase of salary. I think that had better not be done on this bill.

Mr. MILLARD. The amount of labor that the assistant clerk is performing for the committee seems entrely disproportionate to the salary he is receiving. If an increase can be allowed, I believe it to be the proper thing to do.

Mr. CULLOM. I think I shall be compelled to make the point of order if the Senator insists upon the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PENSION AND MILITARY RECORD BILLS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills upon the Calendar, and I will include bills to correct military records.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills and unobjected bills correcting military records. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

AGNES W. AND SARAH J. HILLS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask leave to call up the bill (H. R. 5217) for the relief of Agnes W. Hills and Sarah J. Hills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to Agnes W. Hills and Sarah J. Hills $7,561.80, the value of personal property belonging to Albert G. Hills and Alfred C. Hills, both deceased, taken and converted to the use of the United States by the military forces of the United States during the war for the suppression of the rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BULKELEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up a bill——

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The regular order is demanded, and the Secretary will state the first bill on the Calendar under the order just adopted.

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to give a notice.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I wish to give notice that to-morrow immediately after the conclusion of the morning business I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 4403) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens in the United States," approved March 3, 1903.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's notice will be entered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A request has been made that that bill be passed over and it will be so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to inquire why House bill 11543 has been passed over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A memorandum was left at the desk of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] indicating that he wished to be present when the bill was considered.

Mr. NELSON. It is a bill to correct a military record.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been passed for the present, without prejudice, in the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. NELSON. That is one of the bills which came within the order under which the Senate is now acting.

Mr. KEAN. But this proceeding is by unanimous consent——

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. KEAN. And the Senator from New Hampshire desires to be present when the bill is considered.

Mr. NELSON subsequently said: I wish to call attention to the bill (H. R. 11543) to correct the military record of Benjamin F. Graham. It was laid over at the instance of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I have just seen him, and he has withdrawn his objections, and says the bill may go through, so far as he is concerned.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, after the word "grant," to strike out "an honorable discharge;" and in line 6, after the word "Infantry," to strike out "during the war of the rebellion" and insert "an honorable discharge as of date October 18, 1865;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant to Benjamin F. Graham, an assistant surgeon of the One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, an honorable discharge as of date October 18, 1865.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 1, after line 8, to strike out the following:

SEC. 2. That said honorable discharge shall supersede and take the place of the record relative to the said Benjamin F. Graham now on file in the War Department;

So as to read:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Journal be approved.

The motion was agreed to.

ENLISTMENTS AND PUNISHMENTS IN THE UNITED STATES REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4129) to regulate enlistments and punishments in the United States Revenue-Cutter Service.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons composing the enlisted force of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall be enlisted for a term not to exceed three years, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall prepare regulations governing such enlistments and for the general government of the Service.

SEC. 2. That no commander of a vessel of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall inflict upon any commissioned or warrant officer under his command any other punishment than private reprimand, suspension from duty, arrest, or confinement, and such suspension, arrest, or confinement shall not continue longer than ten days, unless a further period be necessary to bring the offender to trial; nor shall he inflict or cause to be inflicted upon any other person under his command for a single offense, or at any one time, any other punishment than confinement, with or without single irons, on board ship; confinement, on bread and water, with or without single irons, on board ship; deprivation of liberty on shore for a period not exceeding three months; extra duties, and, in case of absence without leave falling short of desertion, forfeiture of two days' pay for each day of unauthorized absence: Provided, That such confinement shall not continue longer than ten days, unless further confinement be necessary to bring the offender to trial, and, when on bread and water, a full ration shall be served every third day: Provided, That all punishments inflicted by the commander or by his order, except reprimand, shall be fully entered upon the ship's log.

SEC. 3. That offenses against the discipline of the Revenue-Cutter Service too grave in character to be adequately dealt with directly by the commanding officer, as hereinbefore provided, may be punished by Revenue-Cutter Service courts, to be convened by or under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such courts shall consist of not less than three commissioned officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and shall, under rules approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, be governed in their organization and procedure substantially in accordance with naval courts, but the jurisdiction of Revenue-Cutter Service courts shall be limited to the following offenses, namely: Disobeying lawful order of superior officer, refusing to obey lawful order of superior officer; striking, assaulting, or attempting or threatening to strike or assault a superior officer while in the execution of the duties of his office; drunkenness on duty; drunkenness; gambling; misappropriation of mess funds; misuse of Government property or supplies; fraudulently signing vouchers; theft in an amount under $100; scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals; desertion; absence from duty without leave or after leave has expired; neglect of duty; conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman; malicious or willful destruction of public property; aiding or enticing others to desert; smuggling liquor on board a vessel of the Revenue-Cutter Service; cruelty toward or oppression or maltreatment of any subordinate person in the Service; using obscene or abusive language; violating or refusing obedience to any lawful order or regulation issued by the Secretary of the Treasury or the President. Such courts shall have power to impose upon a commissioned officer none other than the following punishments, namely: Summary dismissal from the Service; suspension from duty for a period of two years or any part thereof upon reduced pay, which shall in no case be less than one-half nor more than three-fourths of the duty pay of such officer; reduction of rank in his own grade; retention of his present number on the official register for a specified time; imprisonment for a period not to exceed two years; official reprimand. The only punishments that may be imposed by such courts upon any person in the Revenue-Cutter Service other than a commissioned officer shall be the following, namely: Dishonorable discharge; forfeiture of not to exceed two months' pay; imprisonment on land for a period not to exceed one year; confinement aboard ship not to exceed one month; confinement in single irons, on bread and water, or on diminished rations, not exceeding thirty days, but a full ration shall in all cases be given at least every third day; confinement in single irons; reduction to next inferior rating; deprivation of liberty for a period not to exceed three months; extra duties; and the imposing of these punishments will be regulated in accordance with rules prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. A commissioned officer of the said Service may be designated by the convening authority as official prosecutor to prosecute the case in the interests of the Government, and whose general powers and duties will be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The proceedings, findings and sentences of Revenue-Cutter Service courts shall be subject to review by the Secretary of the Treasury, as the convening authority, and the records of such courts shall be filed in the division of Revenue-Cutter Service, Treasury Department, and no sentence of said court shall be carried into effect until approved by the said Secretary: Provided, That in the case of a commissioned officer a sentence of dismissal shall not be carried into effect until approved by the President of the United States.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, as the place of execution of the sentence of a Revenue-Cutter Service court involving imprisonment, any prison or penitentiary that receives Federal prisoners.

SEC. 5. That it shall be lawful for the commanding officer of a vessel of the Revenue-Cutter Service to apprehend and arrest or cause to be apprehended and arrested, by the force under his command, a deserter from the Revenue-Cutter Service wherever found, and shall have authority to call upon all persons to assist in such arrests, and all persons so assisting are hereby invested with the power and authority of deputy United States marshals, and shall deliver the offender on board of the vessel from which he deserted: Provided, That a reward for the apprehension and delivery of a deserter from the Revenue-Cutter Service, as hereinbefore provided, not to exceed $15, may be offered by the commanding officer of the vessel from which the person deserted, and this reward, or any part thereof, may be deducted and paid from money due said deserter: Provided, That no person who has deserted from the Revenue-Cutter Service shall afterwards be employed in said Service, or enlisted in any other military or naval service under the United States, unless he shall have delivered himself aboard the vessel from which he deserted, or been apprehended, and the disability shall have been removed by a board of commissioned officers of the said Service convened for a consideration of the case, and the action of the said board shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 6. That the jurisdiction conferred by this act for the punishment of offenses against the discipline of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall not be regarded as exclusive, but offenders may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be turned over to the civil authorities for trial by any court having jurisdiction of the offense.

SEC. 7. That for offenses against the laws of the United States other than those specified in this act, offenders shall be turned over to the civil authorities for trial.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands a second.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I shall be compelled to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects, and the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Alabama will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 142, noes 3.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-five gentlemen are present. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to congratulate the Speaker in having made an error on the side of subtraction this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Alabama is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demanded a second for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Iowa some questions about the bill. I do not know I am opposed to it, and I want to find out something about it. This bill, as I understand, is a bill providing for enlistments and punishments for desertions and so on in the Marine Corps.

Mr. HEPBURN. No; in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman at what age the bill provides for enlistment?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think the age of 18.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, the present age in the Navy is 21 years, is it not?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think not. This bill fixes the term of enlistment and provides a method for the administration of criminal justice in the Revenue-Cutter Service. There is no law by which discipline could be maintained, and it is in a very lax and bad condition. This bill passed the Senate after careful consideration. I think it had the unanimous support of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Its provisions are mild, all taken from the laws governing the Navy or the Army, but minifying in almost every instance the punishment that may be inflicted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman what is the age provided that a boy shall be enlisted under the age of 21?

Mr. HEPBURN. There is no change in the law whatever upon that subject.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I want to make this suggestion to the gentleman from Iowa: Every Member of this House has been repeatedly annoyed and his constituents annoyed and perhaps distressed by reason of the fact boys enlist under the age of 21, run away from home, and then afterwards desert, and being caught are sent to prison for desertion, and I want to ask the gentleman—of course I recognize the fact nobody else but the gentleman from Iowa can make the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill with an amendment if he desires to do so—I want to ask him if he will not agree to an amendment providing if a boy enlisted for any reason under the age of 21 years and he runs away he shall not be punished for desertion?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have never yet known and I do not think the gentleman has ever yet known a case of that kind in the Revenue-Cutter Service. I think I have never heard of one, and I do not believe there are any.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But it is true in the Army; it is true in the Navy. It is probable that the gentleman has not heard of a case, because the law has not been stringent enough to reach a boy who runs away. And now the gentleman proposes to put it on the statute books. I am not opposed to this bill, but I am opposed to putting further legislation on the statute books that will punish severely, as they are in the Army and Navy, these young boys who, by reason of some trouble at home, run away and then desert.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will say to the gentleman that I do not think boys are enlisted in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They can be.

Mr. HEPBURN. I never saw one, and I am quite sure they are not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa, from some gentlemen sitting by my side that the present age of enlistment in the Revenue-Cutter Service is 18 years; and I think that ought to be changed. I think the law in reference to enlistments and punishment of young boys in the Army and Navy ought to be changed, and, now that we are going to put upon the statute book a new law, I do not think we ought to make this open trap with which to catch the young boys of the country. Very often innocent boys are punished, boys who have not realized what they were doing, and I hope the gentleman will perfect the bill to that extent.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would be willing to do that if the gentleman could give me any assurance that there was any necessity for it. If he could say that a boy had been enlisted, if he could show one evil of the kind that he complains of or is fearful of, I would be willing to provide against it by law; but in the absence of such a case, and in the belief that I have that it can not arise—that boys are not enlisted, and there are none in the Service—I do not think it is necessary to put that on the statute books.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let me ask the gentleman. I may not understand the proposition, but under the law to-day they are not enlisted the Service, are they?

Mr. HEPBURN. I can not say, but I will tell the gentleman I have never heard of one.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the gentleman proposes to pass a bill which provides for the enlistment. When this law passes they will be enlisted for a term of years, and, therefore, although it does not occur under the old law, when you put this law on the statute it will be in the same identical position that the enlistments in the Army and Navy are put upon.

Mr. HEPBURN. The adults enlist, but it is in the form of a contract. There is nothing in the statutes that fixes a term. Boys might enlist in the same way—that is, if it was the policy of the service to receive them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand——

Mr. HEPBURN. But I think it is not, and therefore I think there is no necessity for this provision.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But under your bill you provide for a term of enlistment.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is true.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Therefore you come right within the same category as the Army and Navy. It has not been that way heretofore, but you are going to put a law on the statute books to-day that does provide for an enlistment and does provide for punishment for desertion.

Mr. HEPBURN. No; it does not provide for an enlistment. It simply fixes a term when enlistments occur.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is a provision for enlistments.

Mr. BARTLETT. Right in this connection I want to state to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], that this bill does not provide for any offense for fraudulent enlistments like the law of the Army and Navy does. So that while it provides for desertion and violation of the rules and regulations, the bill nowhere provides for punishment for what they call fraudulent enlistments. So I do not think that the point made by the gentleman from Alabama would be good, because the bill itself does not make it a crime to fraudulently enlist. The bill is specific and sets out in so many words what shall be offenses in the Revenue-Cutter Service and what shall be their punishment. But among those offenses is not the offense of a fraudulent enlistment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not talking about a fraudulent enlistment. I am talking about the boy who has enlisted under it and has deserted. That is where the trouble comes, namely, as to the punishment when he is only 18 and enlists and then deserts, just as they do in the Army and Navy. Now, I ask the gentleman to offer an amendment providing that no boy who enlists under 21 years of age shall be punished for desertion. It is a very simple amendment, but it protects the youths of the country against the trouble we have had in the Army and the Navy, and now, when he is writing that new statute on the books, I think the boy is entitled to that protection.

Mr. POWERS. I will ask the gentleman from Alabama, Does anybody enlist in the Revenue-Cutter Service?

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask if the gentleman from Alabama desires to put on the statute books a provision authorizing desertion either in the Revenue-Cutter Service, in the Navy, or in the Army? That is the present proposition, as I understand it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman, I have not the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I merely want to say that this is a good bill, and ought to pass. It is the only service, so far as I know, without any provision for enlistment and promotion, and without any laws regulating it either, in the interest of the public service. I want to say this, because I was afraid that having made the objection a moment ago for unanimous consent, my own position might not be understood. I am very much in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman want to occupy any of his time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care to. I only asked for a second in order that I might ask the gentleman to make this amendment. I recognize that I can not make it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken, and (in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

AMENDING PENSION LAWS.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House joint resolution 158.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 158) amending section 2 of joint resolution approved July 1, 1902, construing the act of June 27, 1890, and for other purposes.

Resolved, etc., That section 2 of joint resolution approved July 1, 1902, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That in the administration of the pension laws any enlisted man or commissioned officer of the Army, including regulars, volunteers, and militia, or any appointed or enlisted man or commissioned officer of the Navy or Marine Corps, who was honorably discharged from any subsequent contract of service entered into by him during the late war of the rebellion, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from all previous contracts of service as commissioned officer or enlisted man previously entered into by him with the United States during said war: Provided, That such enlisted or appointed man or commissioned officer served not less than six months under any subsequent enlistment, appointment, or commission; that his entire service under any subsequent enlistment, appointment, or commission was faithful, and that he did not receive by reason of said enlistment, appointment, or commission any bounty or gratuity other than from the United States in excess of that to which he would have been entitled if he had continued to serve faithfully until honorably discharged under any contract of service previously entered into by him, either in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, during the war of the rebellion."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 121, noes 1.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I regret, Mr. Speaker, there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-three, and many more not counted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the Chair found 193?

The SPEAKER. And more not counted. A second is ordered. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi twenty minutes.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall not worry the House long with an explanation of this joint resolution. It is merely an expression of the intention of the House in the passage of the joint resolution approved July 1, 1902. It is construing the act of June 27, 1890, which provided that in the administration of the pension laws any enlisted man or commissioned officer of the Army—soldiers—or any appointed or enlisted man or commissioned officer of the Navy or Marine Corps, who had been dismissed from the service and then reenlisted without bounty, and had served for six months or more, shall be held and construed to have been honorably discharged from all similar contracts. The Secretary of the Interior has made a ruling in respect to the word "similar," holding it as "identical," and holding in a case which I have in mind as follows. I am speaking of an actual case: A man enlisted as a private, served until some time in 1863, and was honorably discharged from the service. Then he reenlisted and was commissioned as a captain and dismissed from the service. Immediately thereafter he reenlisted as a private in the Navy, and served until the close of the war, being discharged in June, 1865. The Secretary of the Interior has made a ruling that because this man enlisted as a private, and not as a captain, construing the words "similar contract for service" to mean "identical contract for service," that this man, who enlisted and served until the close of that great struggle, is not entitled to a pension because his contract was not similar, he having enlisted as a private rather than as a captain the third time.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, why was this officer discharged as a captain?

Mr. SIBLEY. That will be going into the history of this individual case. But it was this: He was commissioned as a captain, sent to a regiment where he was not known and where there existed a desire that some other officer should have that position as captain. As a result of that, one night he was invited to go on the picket line. He said, "Yes, when I get my side arms." They told him, "You will not need your side arms." This is evidenced by the testimony existing in the War Department of those people who caused his dismissal.

They invited him onto the picket line at night, and when they got to a thick place in the woods, all at once they were surrounded by men who were, I think, ostensibly Mosby's guerrillas. They had their coats turned wrong side out. They seized him, blindfolded him, and bound him, and, according to their own testimony, they led him over stumps and logs and through brush for about an hour, and then brought him before an officer who decreed that he should be hanged. They finally said to him that if he would reveal the number of the troops in the Union forces and their location they would save his life. Now, the Bible says that all that a man hath will he give for his life, and this boy told them. Then the testimony goes on to say that the moment they had taken off the hoodwink, he jumped into the timber at the risk of his life and escaped.

Mr. FINLEY. That was a clear case of hazing, was it not?

Mr. SIBLEY. Absolutely. But the colonel immediately dismissed this man. That was during the great struggle. That action was approved later by the commanding general of that corps. There never was a court-martial, and any gentleman here in reading that case will say, without a question of doubt in his mind, that those who should have been court-martialed and dismissed were the men who formed the conspiracy against their brother officer.

Mr. FINLEY. I agree with the gentleman in that.

Mr. SIBLEY. This man immediately reenlisted and served until the close of the war, and this amendment simply provides that the words "similar contract" shall not be regarded as an identical contract, under which construction that man would have been compelled to serve as a captain instead of a private. It is a pretty good mark that a man is not a coward when he will reenlist as a private after having served as a captain.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is there not now a statute on the books providing that where a soldier deserted and afterwards served six months he is entitled to an honorable discharge?

Mr. SIBLEY. Yes; and the gentleman will find a copy of that statute in the report. There was a question in the mind of no Member of this House when we passed that joint resolution but that we were doing identically what I am seeking to accomplish through the passage of this amendment, but this was the construction of some Pension Commissioner, indorsed by the Secretary of the Interior, that the words "similar contract" meant identical service.

Mr. HINSHAW. I have no doubt this is all right.

Mr. ZENOR. I have a case in mind, of a decision by the Secretary of the Interior. I had a case that went up on an appeal from the decision of the Pension Bureau to the Secretary of the Interior, a case where a private had enlisted for three years and had served perhaps in the neighborhood of eighteen months. For some reason he left his company and regiment, but reenlisted for an additional term of three years, as I now recall. He served out his second term of enlistment and was honorably discharged, reenlisted for a third term, and served a little less than six months, being then discharged by reason of the close of the war. The Bureau and the Secretary of the Interior held in that case that because the soldier had not served a full six months during his last enlistment, although he had served three years in the intermediate term of enlistment and was honorably discharged, that he did not come within the purview of this law, and therefore was not entitled to the benefit of it. I ask the gentleman whether or not this amendment covers cases of that kind?

Mr. SIBLEY. I am frank to say to my friend from Indiana that I think it does not. There was no thought, in offering this amendment, to change at all the action of the House taken in 1902, but it was merely to show how Congress construed that law, because the Secretary of the Interior had construed it entirely opposite to what, I think, was the judgment and the action of all the Members of this body when we passed the law.

Mr. ZENOR. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, I notice you have changed this language in reference to this exact point:

Provided, That such enlisted or appointed man served not less than six months under said last enlistment.

That language is changed so as to provide that the enlisted man shall have served as much as six months during any subsequent term of enlistment, which, it seems to me, covers the case I referred to and all others included within that class.

Mr. SIBLEY. Very possibly it does.

Mr. ZENOR. The word "last" is changed to the word "subsequent." I think this clearly cures the defect to which I call attention, a defect which should be remedied by this resolution, if it does not now do so.

Mr. CONNER. I will ask the gentleman if he will not insert after the words "six months" the words "or was wounded?"

Mr. SIBLEY. I understand that under a motion to suspend the rules no amendment is permissible.

Mr. CONNER. You can get unanimous consent to offer that amendment.

Mr. SIBLEY. Then I come back to a request for unanimous consent, and the gentleman from Mississippi objects to unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 141, noes 0.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I must call attention again to the fact that there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Again the Chair has counted 195—a quorum.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, would the Chair inform the House how he counted them—individually or by groups?

The SPEAKER. Counted them in blocks of 10; evidently there is over a quorum present. Two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules are suspended and the joint resolution is passed.

AMENDING SECTIONS 6 AND 12 OF THE CURRENCY ACT OF MARCH 14, 1900.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 13566, to amend sections 6 and 12 of the currency act approved March 14, 1900.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of an act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes, approved March 14, 1900, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to receive deposits of gold coin with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States in sums of not less than $20, and to issue gold certificates therefor in denominations of not less than $5, and the coin so deposited shall be retained in the Treasury and held for the payment of such certificates on demand, and used for no other purpose. Such certificates shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued, and when held by any national banking association may be counted as a part of its lawful reserve: Provided, That whenever and so long as the gold coin and bullion held in the reserve fund in the Treasury for the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes shall fall and remain below $100,000,000 the authority to issue certificates as herein provided shall be suspended: And provided further, That whenever and so long as the aggregate amount of United States notes and silver certificates in the general fund of the Treasury shall exceed $60,000,000 the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, suspend the issue of the certificates herein provided for: And provided further, That of the amount of such outstanding certificates one-fourth at least shall be in denominations of $50 or less: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, issue such certificates in denominations of $10,000, payable to order. And section 5193 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby repealed."

SEC. 2. That section 12 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 12. That upon the deposit with the Treasurer of the United States by any national banking association of any bonds of the United States in the manner provided by existing law such association shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes in blank, registered and countersigned as provided by law, equal in amount to the par value of the bonds so deposited; and any national banking association now having bonds on deposit for the security of circulating notes, and upon which an amount of circulating notes has been issued less than the par value of the bonds, shall be entitled, upon due application to the Comptroller of the Currency, to receive additional circulating notes in blank to an amount which will increase the circulating notes held by such association to the par value of the bonds deposited, such additional notes to be held and treated in the same way as circulating notes of national banking associations heretofore issued and subject to all the provisions of law affecting such notes: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to modify or repeal the provisions of section 5167 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to require additional deposits of bonds or of lawful money in case the market value of the bonds held to secure the circulating notes shall fall below the par value of the circulating notes outstanding for which such bonds may be deposited as security: And provided further, That the circulating notes furnished to national banking associations under the provisions of this act shall be of the denominations prescribed by law, and that any national banking association shall, after the passage of this act, be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency and place in circulation such portion of its circulating notes in the denomination of $5 as the Secretary of the Treasury may, from time to time, authorize by regulation: And provided further, That the total amount of such notes issued to any such association may equal at any time, but shall not exceed, the amount at such time of its capital stock actually paid in: And provided further, That under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury any national banking association may substitute the 2 per cent bonds issued under the provisions of this act for any of the bonds deposited with the Treasurer to secure circulation or to secure deposits of public money; and so much of an act entitled 'An act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes,' approved July 12, 1882, as prohibits any national bank which makes any deposit of lawful money in order to withdraw its circulating notes from receiving any increase of its circulation for the period of six months from the time it made such deposit of lawful money for the purpose aforesaid is hereby repealed, and all other acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this section are hereby repealed."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 19, noes 3.

So a second was ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, again I realize the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-three present, a quorum. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 148, noes 16.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I think we had better have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays. All those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] Twenty-nine gentlemen have arisen.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The other side, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the other side. All those opposed to ordering the yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-eight gentlemen have arisen, and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that in refusing the yeas and nays the point of no quorum has been disclosed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is not required to order or to refuse the yeas and nays. The ayes have it, and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the bill is passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 5533) to appoint an additional judge for the southern district of New York.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint an additional judge for the southern district of New York, whose length of term, compensation, duties, and powers shall be the same as now provided by law for the judges of said district.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand a second.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. ALEXANDER and Mr. WILLIAMS as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 129, noes 0.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-seven Members present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays can not under the rule be had on ordering a second. That is expressly provided in the rules. A second is ordered, and the gentleman from New York is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi to twenty minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will reserve my time, too, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was being taken and the House was dividing, when

Mr. WILLIAMS called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 178, nays 14, answered "present" 20, not voting 169, as follows:

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be marked "present."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present when his name was called?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I came into the room just as my name was called, but I did not know upon what question the vote was being taken.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman hear his name called?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I did. I simply desire to vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be very glad to have the gentleman recorded, but unfortunately under the rules he could not do so unless it were necessary to make a quorum, and in that event he would take great delight in doing so.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be marked "present."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present when his name was called?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman does not bring himself within the rules.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire how I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded. Was the gentleman present when his name was called and paying attention?

Mr. BABCOCK. I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present?

Mr. BABCOCK. I was here in the Capitol.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rules.

Mr. BABCOCK. I could not say whether I was here in the Hall or in the Rotunda when my name was called.

The SPEAKER. That is the gentleman's misfortune. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rules.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5913. An act to authorize the sale of certain lands to the city of Mena, in the County of Polk, in the State of Arkansas.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 17576) to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CARTER, Mr. FLINT, and Mr. DUBOIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title:

H. R. 12987. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 5913. An act to authorize the sale of certain lands to the city of Mena, in the County of Polk, in the State of Arkansas—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL INSTITUTE OF AMERICA.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 5131) incorporating the Archæological Institute of America.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Simeon E. Baldwin, Frederic C. Bartlett, William N. Bates, W. K. Bixby, Charles J. Bonaparte, Charles P. Bowditch, Henry F. Burton, H. W. Callahan, John Campbell, Mitchell Carroll, R. R. Converse, J. T. Edmundson, Howard P. Eells, John W. Foster, Harold N. Fowler, Basil L. Gildersleeve, John S. Gary, J. E. Harry, John B. Jackson, Francis W. Kelsey, John O. Keopfli, William A. Lamberton, John B. Larner, Seth Low, Charles F. Lummis, G. F. Moore, Edward Delavan Perry, Henry Kirke Porter, John Dyneley Prince, Edward Robinson, J. G. Schurman, Thomas Day Seymour, F. W. Shipley, M. S. Slaughter, Charles F. Smith, George S. Sykes, Frank B. Tarbell, Andrew F. West, Benjamin Ide Wheeler, James R. Wheeler, John Williams White, John H. Wright, their associates and successors be, and they are hereby, created a body corporate and politic in the District of Columbia by the name, title, and style of the Archæological Institute of America, and by that name shall have perpetual succession for the purpose of promoting archæological studies by investigation and research in the United States and foreign countries by sending out expeditions for special investigation, by aiding the efforts of independent explorers, by publication of archæological papers, and reports of the results of the expeditions which the institute may undertake or promote, and by any other means which may from time to time be desirable.

SEC. 2. That the government of said corporation shall be vested in a council consisting of the following ex officio members: The presidents, the honorary presidents, the vice-presidents, the treasurer, and the secretary of the institute and the editor in chief and the business manager of its journal, the presidents of affiliated societies and the chairmen of the managing committees of any American schools founded by the Archæological Institute of American in foreign countries for classical or archæological studies and research (including those now affiliated with the voluntary association known as the Archæological Institute of America), and the chairman of the committee on American archæology, and of additional members annually chosen by the members of affiliated societies, as may be provided by the by-laws.

SEC. 3. That said corporation may make all by-laws, rules, and regulations not inconsistent with law that may be necessary or expedient to accomplish the purposes of its creation; and it may hold real estate and personal property in the United States and any foreign country for the necessary use and purposes of said organization to an amount not to exceed $1,000,000. The principal office of said corporation shall be in Washington, in the District of Columbia, and its annual meetings may be held in such places as its by-laws may provide.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. GARRETT. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Tennessee will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 88, noes none; so a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to twenty minutes. Does the gentleman desire to consume his time?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio reserves his time.

Mr. GARRETT. I want to ask the gentleman a question in his time or in mine. Is this an institution that could not incorporated under the laws of the District?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is.

Mr. GARRETT. Why?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Because the incorporators are residents of a number of different States. The organization has been in existence for twenty-five years. Its objects are almost entirely to promote and direct archæological research in foreign countries, and they are unable to incorporate under the general law here for the reason that so many of the incorporators and officers are residents of different States. I will say to the gentleman that there is a mistake in the reference of the bill. It was originally referred to the District of Columbia Committee and rereferred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the field of activity of the association being almost entirely in foreign countries.

Mr. GARRETT. They could incorporate under the laws of any State, or at least of some of the States, could they not?

Mr. LONGWORTH. They could not; for the reason it would require a majority of the incorporators to be residents of that State.

Mr. GARRETT. Could they incorporate in the State of New Jersey?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I believe not even in the State of New Jersey. The bill was unanimously passed by the Senate, and unanimously reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House.

Mr. GARRETT. By what possible reason should it have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is an association which is entirely concerned in research in other countries. It also maintains three American schools—one in Rome, one in Athens, and one in Palestine.

Mr. GARRETT. You say it has been in existence for twenty-five years?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. As a corporation?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; as an organization of about sixteen affiliated societies.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, this is one of those cases which we have had up here before of creating corporations by special act. I have nothing to say about the matter except that, however worthy the cause, it seems to me it is very bad policy to pass these special acts through this House. If there is a defect in the District law by which such institutions as this can not be incorporated under the general law of this District, then the proper course for gentlemen to pursue who desire to secure these incorporations is to secure an amendment to the District code, where it may be carefully considered by a committee. There is danger in these special acts, however worthy the cause for which they are passed, and I am opposed to them from the standpoint of principle without reference to the merits to the particular case that comes up. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question or two.

Mr. LONGWORTH. With great pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How did the Foreign Affairs Committee ever get hold of this bill?

Mr. LONGWORTH. They got jurisdiction of the bill because it dealt more particularly with the question of foreign affairs than it did with questions relating to the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, do you not think, really, yourself, it ought to have been considered by the District of Columbia Committee?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why, I will say to the gentleman that, in my opinion, it stands on all fours with such incorporations as the Red Cross Society, which was passed by this House at the last session; on all fours with the incorporation of the American Art Academy, in Rome, both of which matters were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, is it too late to raise the question of order on this bill being reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, yes; this is to suspend all rules.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I know that, but certainly you can not—well, you can, too. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Of course it is possible to suspend the rules and pass an elephant. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT. There is a difference between this and the Carnegie Institute, that the gentleman has referred to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not refer to it.

Mr. GARRETT. The Red Cross. This bill creates for us a corporation of the District of Columbia. The American Red Cross was created a general corporation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It was incorporated by special act and charter under the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARRETT. It does not have to have its principal office in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. GARRETT. I think not, and I think the gentleman will so find if he will examine that act. I have examined it with considerable care, and I do not think he will find it that way.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but the central office of the Red Cross is in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARRETT. That may be as a matter of fact, but as a matter of law it does not have to be. But there is this difference between that and this bill, that the Red Cross was organized primarily for caring for soldiers in time of war.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It also has a number of other objects.

Mr. GARRETT. But that is the main purpose of the act.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the gentleman will recall that the Red Cross has been one of the most active associations in the recent disaster at San Francisco.

Mr. GARRETT. I recall it, and believe it to be one of the most worthy associations in the world.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill and all bills like it, on the principle that Congress has no right to go into the general business of granting charters to corporations. I would just as lief this one would pass as any of the rest of them. But in the beginning of this session of Congress, at least toward the first part of it, in discussing one of these bills, I stated that if we passed that bill and encouraged people to apply to Congress for a charter, when they could go to the District authorities here and get a charter, like other people do, that we would encourage divers and sundry corporations in esse and in posse to come in here and apply for charters at the hands of Congress for the prestige it would give them. At the risk of boring the House by repetition of the statement I have made here repeatedly, I say that we already fool away a great deal of time here with three sorts of business that we ought not be bothered with at all. One of them is the District of Columbia business, another one is the private-claims business, and the other one is the private pension bills The upshot of encouraging this kind of charters is to add a fourth class of superfluous work to the already overworked Congress.

Now, there is not any reason on the face of the earth why the incorporators or the archæological company, if it is to be called a company, should not go down to the District officials and get a charter. I never intend to see another one of these bills pass through this House without making a fight against it. I do not care a straw who introduces it or what it is about, because it is loading us up with something we ought not to be loaded up with.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I agree entirely with the gentleman from Missouri, as I almost always do on nonpartisan questions, that it is a mistake to give general charters of incorporation by act of Congress. But it seems to me that this is an entirely different sort of a corporation. As I said in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], it is impossible for this association to obtain incorporation under the laws of any State or under the general laws of the District, for the reason that its officers, no two of them, are residents of the same State, and practically very few of its incorporators as named in this bill are residents of the same State. It is impossible——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that this organization has been in existence for twenty-five years. What are the purposes of the organization?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will read to the gentleman the stated purposes of the organization.

Mr. MANN. I would rather have the gentleman state to me what the purposes have been in the past in fact.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The purpose has been to develop archæological research in foreign countries, principally in Greece and in Palestine; also to maintain American schools abroad for instruction in these subjects.

Mr. MANN. Purely patriotic purposes?

Mr. LONGWORTH. A purely patriotic purpose.

Mr. MANN. No money?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Absolutely no money.

Mr. MANN. And no selfish interest?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No selfish interest whatever. The difficulty that this association labors under now is that it is unable to accept gifts and bequests for the reason that the only way bequests can be accepted is by some individual acting as trustee for this association. Of course, in addition they desire the added prestige of being an American institution for the purpose of developing their work in other countries.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that being incorporated under the National Government will aid them in getting opportunities to make these researches in foreign countries?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, unquestionably.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, on the 13th day of April I submitted some remarks on the Post-Office appropriation bill. I desire to revise those remarks and extend them in the RECORD and to reprint them. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GARRETT. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 131; noes 19.

Mr. GARRETT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Twenty-four gentlemen have arisen in support of the demand; not a sufficient number. The yeas and nays are refused; and, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules are suspended, and the bill is passed.

Mr. GARRETT. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. On a yea-and-nay vote had a few minutes ago a quorum was ascertained. The Chair thinks there is a quorum.

ADDITIONS TO THE LIGHT-HOUSE ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 19432.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19432) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish and provide the following aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment, under the Light-House Board, in the Department of Commerce and Labor, in accordance with the respective limits of cost hereinafter set forth, which shall in no case be exceeded:

FIRST LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

A light and fog-signal station at Isle au Haut, Me., at a cost not to exceed $14,000.

SECOND LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

A fog signal at Baker Island, Salem Harbor, Massachusetts, at a cost not to exceed $10,000.

A light vessel to be placed off Nantucket Shoals, Massachusetts, at a cost not to exceed $115,000.

THIRD LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

For lighting Ambrose Channel, New York Bay:

a. A light vessel for the sea entrance of the channel, at a cost not to exceed $115,000.

b. A light-house on Staten Island, New York, and raising West Bank light, at a cost not to exceed $100,000.

c. Two lens lanterns and structures for range on the bend, at a cost not to exceed $12,000.

FOURTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

The limit of cost for establishing a light and fog-signal station on the new breakwater, Harbor of Refuge, Delaware Bay, authorized by the act approved June 6, 1900, is hereby increased by the sum of $20,000, so as to make the total limit of cost $50,000 instead of $30,000, as heretofore authorized.

Range lights at Bellevue Range, Delaware River, at a cost not to exceed $40,000.

A light and fog-signal station at Miah Maul Shoal, Delaware River, at a cost not to exceed $75,000.

FIFTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

A light station at Pungoteague Creek, Virginia, at a cost not to exceed $8,000.

A light and fog-signal station at Ragged Point, Potomac River, at a cost not to exceed $30,000.

SIXTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

The limit of cost of light vessel to be placed off the outer bar of Brunswick, Ga., heretofore authorized, is hereby increased by the sum of $25,000, so as to make the total limit of cost $115,000 instead of $90,000, as heretofore authorized.

The limit of cost of tender for inspector, heretofore authorized, is hereby increased by the sum of $10,000, so as to make the total limit of cost $135,000 instead of $125,000, as heretofore authorized.

EIGHTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

Dwellings for three light-house keepers at Southwest Pass light station, Louisiana, at a cost not to exceed $12,000.

NINTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

A light and fog-signal station on the south end of the breakwater, Harbor of Refuge, Milwaukee, Wis., at a cost not to exceed $100,000.

A light-keepers' dwelling at Sheboygan light station, Sheboygan, Wis., at a cost not to exceed $6,000.

A light-keepers' dwelling at Menominee Harbor, Michigan, at a cost not to exceed $5,000.

TENTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

A dwelling for the keepers of the light-house on Horseshoe Reef, entrance to Buffalo Harbor, New York, at a cost not to exceed $6,200.

Four range lights, Strawberry Island Cut and channel leading thereto, Niagara River, New York, at a cost not to exceed $13,000.

A light-keepers' dwelling at Tibbetts Point light station, New York, at a cost not to exceed $4,000.

ELEVENTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

Two range lights, Isle aux Peches, Lake St. Clair, Michigan, at a cost not to exceed $18,000.

A light vessel to be placed off Martins Reef, northwest end of Lake Huron, Michigan, at a cost not to exceed $45,000.

A light and fog-signal station on Rock of Ages, Lake Superior, at a cost not to exceed $100,000 in addition to the sum of $25,000 heretofore appropriated.

TWELFTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

A light station at Makapuu Point, at the Island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, at a cost not to exceed $60,000.

A light station and range lights at Honolulu Harbor, Territory of Hawaii, at a cost not to exceed $40,000.

A fog signal at the entrance to the harbor at Humboldt Bay, California, at a cost not to exceed $15,000.

A light-keepers' dwelling at Cape Mendocino, California, at a cost not to exceed $5,500.

A light and fog-signal station near Point Cabrillo, California, at a cost not to exceed $50,000.

THIRTEENTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

A light vessel for use off the mouth of the Columbia River, Oregon, at a cost not to exceed $130,000.

A light-keeper's dwelling at Robinson Point, State of Washington, at a cost not to exceed $5,000.

A fog signal at Ediz Hook light station, State of Washington, at a cost not to exceed $10,000.

New tender for inspection service in the thirteenth light-house district, at a cost not to exceed $110,000 in addition to the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $40,000 for the repair of the tender Manzanita, carried by the act approved March 3, 1905, which shall be applied on the new tender herein authorized.

FOURTEENTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

Post lights on the Monongahela River, at a cost not to exceed $5,000.

SEC. 2. That the Light-House Board is authorized to employ temporarily at Washington not exceeding three draftsmen, to be paid at current rates, to prepare plans for the tenders and light vessels authorized by this act, and to be paid from the respective appropriations therefor, such employment to terminate on or before the date when the plans for such tenders shall be finished and proposals for building said tenders are invited by advertisement.

SEC. 3. That after the 1st day of January, 1907, it shall be unlawful for any person, company, corporation, or municipality not under the control of the Light-House Board, to establish, erect, or maintain in the navigable waters of the United States any light as an aid to navigation, or any other aid to navigation similar to any of those maintained by the United States under the control and direction of the Light-House Board, without first obtaining permission so to do from the Light-House Board, in accordance with rules and regulations to be established by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; and any person violating the provisions of this section or any of the rules and regulations established by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in accordance herewith shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be subject to a fine not exceeding the sum of $100 for each offense, and each day during which such violation shall coninue shall be considered as a new offense.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand a second.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object to the unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 108, noes none.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. Only a few moments ago a quorum was ascertained on a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As the gentleman has informed me that he will explain the bill, I will withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the point of no quorum. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I understand that this bill carries an appropriation of a large amount of money, and for that reason I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois make a statement to the House of the reasons for the enactment of the legislation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the bill carries no appropriation, although it makes authorizations which will result in appropriations. The total amount of the authorization is a little more than $1,300,000. The bill provides for a number of aids to navigation in the Light-House Service. Among others are aids to navigation at New York Harbor for Ambrose channel, where the Government is now constructing a channel 40 feet in depth and 1,000 feet in width, which will be utterly valueless, so far as the use of the channel is concerned, until lights are provided. This bill makes provision for lights at that point. The same is done for lights on the Delaware Bay and Delaware River, where the Government is engaged in deepening the channel, and the channel can not be used until lights are provided. In addition to that, you will all remember we lost the light vessel located at Nantucket Shoals last fall under most pathetic and exciting circumstances. This bill provides for a new light vessel to take its place, costing $115,000. Last fall there was also lost one light vessel and one inspector's tender on the Pacific coast. This bill provides for the replacement of those with new vessels.

Another provision is for a new light-house at Honolulu Harbor, where the Government is now engaged in deepening the entrance of the harbor and in cutting away the site upon which the present light-house is located, so that a new light-house is absolutely necessary. Another is on the Rock of Ages, in Lake Superior, a most dangerous point, where the lake traffic from Duluth and Superior passes, which costs $100,000. Another light is for the breakwater at Milwaukee, costing $100,000. Instead of the breakwater being an aid to navigation, so far it has been a detriment, and will continue until a new light is provided. I will say to the House that we have been asked for about $5,000,000 for aids to navigation. By the very closest scrutiny possible of each item, we have reduced the amount we have recommended to $1,300,000. If any gentleman desires any further information, I will be pleased to give it; otherwise I reserve the balance of my time and ask for a vote.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to authorize aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment. This establishment comprises the light-houses, light vessels, fog signals, range lights, light-house tenders for use of inspectors, and light-houe keepers' dwellings on the Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf coasts, the Great Lakes, and inland rivers of the United States and of the Territory of Hawaii. The bill has been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which has had under consideration the various bills introduced during the present session relating to this service.

The bill authorizes $1,313,500, and every item in the bill has received the closest attention.

There are many other items that are desirable and that would be a great benefit to navigation, if provided for, but the committee reported only those bills that were deemed most urgent and necessary. I favor even a far greater appropriation for aids to navigation and for river and harbor work. Believing, as I do, that while provision should be made for the military and naval establishments necessary for the defense of our country and protection of our commerce, the amounts provided for these purposes are out of all proportion to that expended by the Government for river and harbor improvement and to provide aids in the Light-House Service for the great and growing commerce of the United States.

Our Army appropriation bill this year, as passed by the House, carries, in round numbers, $73,000,000; our naval bill, $100,000,000; the fortifications bill, $5,278,000; the Military Academy bill, $1,600,000. If we add to these the amount appropriated for pensions, $140,000,000, we have for military and naval purposes, including pensions, a total of $320,000,000; and yet we hesitate to appropriate $1,300,000 for aids to navigation in the Light-House Service.

EXTENT OF COAST LINES.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a table showing the extent of the coast lines of the United States, of its Great Lakes and rivers and island possessions, excepting the Philippines, together with the number of lights and light vessels in use and the cost of their maintenance yearly, as well as the extent of the coast lines of the British Islands and of France, with their lights and light vessels and the annual cost of their maintenance.

	Coast line (general) in nautical miles.	Number of lights.	Number of light vessels.
Atlantic coast	1,773	975	32
Gulf coast	1,607	238	3
Porto Rico	229	24
Pacific coast	1,571	237	4
Alaska	4,123	16
Hawaiian Islands	628	23
Guam Island	80
Midway Islands	20	1
Samoan Islands	83	3
Northern lakes and rivers	3,500	580	11
Western rivers	3,845	1,435
United States, total	17,499	3,532	50
Maintenance per year, 1905	$3,704,451.24
England	1,580	532	65
Scotland	2,517	337	5
Ireland	1,367	147	11
Total, British Islands	5,464	1,016	81
Maintenance, 1904	$2,539,699.75
France	1,830	541	1
Maintenance, 1902	$615,810.00

In order that we may fully realize the importance of the ports for which appropriations for aids for navigation are authorized by this bill, I desire to submit the figures showing the foreign commerce of each of the ports named, imports and exports being given separately, and also in the aggregate, and the tonnage of vessels engaged in foreign commerce.

FOREIGN COMMERCE AND TONNAGE.

Table showing the foreign commerce and tonnage movement in the foreign trade of the following customs districts during the year ending June 30, 1905.

Customs district.	Imports.	Exports.	Vessels entered.	Tonnage cleared.
			Tons.
New York	$379,629,256	$524,726,005	9,630,853	9,311,527
Delaware Bay:
Philadelphia	60,180,901	63,278,070	1,833,640	1,817,984
Delaware	566,430	3,585,425	109,362	106,404
Total Delaware Bay	60,747,331	66,863,495	1,943,002	1,924,388
Puget Sound	7,378,328	43,843,173	1,238,095	1,436,374
Willamette	2,611,339	7,722,905	76,440	149,584
Northern border and Lake ports	a 8,561,989	a 22,206,817	6,139,918	6,137,721

a Includes merchandise carried only in vessels.

As there are no figures of the tonnage of vessels engaged in coastwise commerce entering or leaving New York or Philadelphia available, I can only add the number of vessels engaged in coastwise commerce which arrived at New York and at Philadelphia in the calendar year 1905, to wit, at New York, 7,182, and at Philadelphia, 4,334.

AMBROSE CHANNEL, NEW YORK.

The most important item in the bill is that providing for the lighting of Ambrose channel, New York. This is the great short cut up New York Bay for which shipping men and navigators have been looking forward for years. This improvement, formerly called "East channel," was authorized in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, and provides for a channel in lower New York Bay 2,000 feet wide and 40 feet deep, to cost $4,000,000. It is intended to have the work completed in 1911. This channel when completed will enable the biggest liners leaving the port of New York to sail at any hour without depending on the tide, as is now the case. In June, 1905, a depth of 22 feet had been attained, and by January, 1907, 35 feet is promised, so that the work of lighting the channel must be ready for the partial opening in January, 1907. The sum required to complete the system of lights for Ambrose channel is $360,000, and of this amount this bill carries $227,000, which sum is necessary at this time.

DELAWARE BAY AND RIVER.

The next great work is lighting the Delaware Bay and River. Extensive river and harbor work is now being carried on there by the Government. The lighting of this river and bay, complete, will cost $446,000, of which amount $135,000 is carried in this bill. This sum will provide lights, urgently required at the present time and of first importance in this work.

LIGHT VESSELS.

Three light vessels are provided for, one to be stationed at Nantucket Shoals, Massachusetts, to take the place of light vessel No. 58, which foundered on December 11, 1905, in a terrific gale. This is one of the most important stations on the Atlantic coast. It is 40 miles off Nantucket Shoals and on the line of all vessels plying between New York and Europe. As the Light-House Board has no vessel to take the place, except temporarily, of the one lost, it is imperative to replace her with a new one at the earliest possible moment.

The second light vessel is to replace No. 50, located off the mouth of the Columbia River, Oregon. The report of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives on January 18, 1906, says:

I have the honor to state, at the instance of the Light-House Board, that an appropriation of $120,000 is needed with which to build a light vessel to replace Columbia River light vessel No. 50, Oregon.

The Light-House Board reports that this composite light vessel, which was built in 1891, parted her moorings during a heavy sea, and on October 6, 1905, was driven on the beach. The only proposal received for repairing this light vessel was for $33,550, which is considered excessive.

The Board desires to repair old light vessel No. 50, so that she may be held as a relief light vessel to be used during good weather. The station off the mouth of the Columbia River is one of the stormiest on our coast. Once before, in 1899, light vessel No. 50, which has no steam power, broke adrift and went on shore. She was gotten off and repaired at a total cost of about $31,000, and was away from her station about twenty months. Her original cost in 1891–92 was about $70,000. Fortunately no lives were lost at either time she went on shore. The station off the mouth of the Columbia River should be marked by a new light vessel having her own steam power and modern improvements.

The third light vessel authorized is to be placed off Martins Reef, northwestern end of Lake Huron, and the report of the Light-House Board on the necessity of this vessel is as follows:

It is proposed to place a light on Martins Reef as an aid to the great and increasing traffic between the mouth of the St. Marys River and the Straits of Mackinac. Since the great development of steel works at Chicago, Milwaukee, and Joliet and the discovery of new and cheap ores suitable for making steel on the northerly shore of Lake Superior, the commerce passing from the mouth of St. Marys River through the Straits of Mackinac into Lake Michigan has increased with rapidity. It is several times greater than it was five years ago. The vessels carrying ore from Duluth and Two Harbors to Lake Michigan ports are the largest in the lake marine class. These vessels pass close to the dangerous Martins Reef; hence a light vessel there is much needed.

In the original estimate for this light vessel a wooden vessel was contemplated. From information since received and in view of the exposed and dangerous position she would occupy, it is now believed that it would be more economical to build this light vessel of steel, with auxiliary steam power, as she could then not only place and maintain herself on her station, but she could also tow the Poe Reef light vessel to and from her station, and thus effect a saving of about $150 a year. This Department, concurring with the Light-House Board, recommends the passage of this bill, after it is so amended as to provide for an appropriation of $45,000.

LIGHT-HOUSE TENDERS.

A new tender for inspection service is provided for in the thirteenth district, State of Washington, to replace the tender Manzanita. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor says in reference to this tender:

I have the honor to state that an appropriation of $150,000 is needed with which to build a tender to replace the tender Manzanita.

The Light-House Board reports that the Manzanita was, on October 6, 1905, run into and sunk by a dredge in tow of a tugboat on the Columbia River, Oregon. This tender was built in 1879, and is a wooden, screw steamer. It is estimated that it will cost $51,000 to put her in repair, but even then she would still be an old tender. It is therefore deemed best that a new and modern tender be built to replace the Manzanita.

THE GREAT LAKES.

The immensity of the commerce of the Great Lakes is appreciated by but few persons. The following statement shows the freight tonnage and tonnage of vessels entering and leaving all of the lake ports during the year 1905:

Vessels entered at all ports, registered tonnage	87,810,640
Freight carried inward, tons	65,395,161
Vessels cleared at all ports, registered tonnage	87,978,397
Freight carried outward, tons	67,345,620

The value of this tremendous commerce, when added to the $31,000,000, the value of the foreign commerce carried on the Great Lakes during 1905, will fall but little short of $1,000,000,000.

ROCK OF AGES, LAKE SUPERIOR.

The most important items carried in this bill for the Great Lakes are: A light and fog-signal station on Rock of Ages, Lake Superior, for which $100,000 is authorized, in addition to $25,000 heretofore provided. The Light-House Board and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor say in this connection:

During the season of southerly and westerly winds many vessels bound to and from Duluth, by taking a course along the north shore of the lake and in lee of Isle Royale, are enabled to run when the lake is too rough for the more southerly course. A light and fog signal on the dangerous rocks off the westerly end of Isle Royale would be a valuable aid to these vessels. It is therefore proposed to establish a light and fog-signal station on the Rock of Ages, off the western end of Isle Royale. These views of the Light-House Board meet with the approval of this Department, and it is therefore recommended that this bill be passed, appropriating $125,000, less the $25,000 already appropriated, for the construction of a light-house and fog signal on Rock of Ages, Lake Superior, Michigan.

LIGHT, ETC., ON BREAKWATER AT MILWAUKEE.

Regarding a light and fog-signal station on the south end of the breakwater at Milwaukee, Wis., the Board, in its report, says:

Since the first recommendation was made the matter has presented itself in a different form. The original recommendation contemplated a fourth-order light at or near the southerly end of the new breakwater. It is now considered that a flashing light of the third order should be provided, as it would make a more permanent light. The elevation should not be less than 105 feet above mean lake level. This, while it is somewhat higher than was at first proposed, would enable the light to be seen well past if not over North Point, looking from the southward. In consequence of this increased height and the increased cost of a third-order over a fourth-order station, and also the increase in the cost of materials of all kinds, it is found that the cost of the light station will be materially increased. With a higher focal plane, a more powerful light and a first-order fog signal at this station, the light at North Point, Milwaukee, could be discontinued. It is estimated that a proper light and fog signal can not be established on Milwaukee Breakwater at a cost less than $100,000; hence the Board recommends that an appropriation of this amount be made therefor.

RANGE LIGHTS, NIAGARA RIVER.

Four range lights are provided for the Niagara River at Strawberry Island Shoal. A bill introduced by me was unanimously reported to the House in the Fifty-eighth Congress to establish these lights. This item is strongly urged by the shipping interests. The necessity for these lights is apparent from the following extract from the report of the Light-House Board:

Strawberry Island Cut and channel leading thereto, Niagara River, New York.—The conditions attending the navigation of the Strawberry Island Cut and channels leading thereto are now practically the same as they were four years ago. The channels are narrow, with a considerable current, and the course for vessels through them is not straight. Although the channels are well buoyed, the navigation of them is more than ordinarily hazardous. Practically all of the vessel tonnage going into and out of the harbor of Tonawanda goes through these channels. For 1903 that tonnage was 1,103,207, as given by custom-house records.

The following recommendation, made in the Board's last four annual reports, is renewed:

"Vessels bound down the Niagara River to points below the International Bridge must make their way through the narrow natural channel between the main shore and the shoals about the head of Strawberry Island and the artificial cut made by the Government through Strawberry Island Shoal. These channels are marked by buoys, which can not be put down until some time, usually several weeks, after navigation opens in the spring, as they would be carried away by floating ice. Moreover, they are liable at any time to be shifted by vessels hitting and moving them in the swift currents, and they do not supply the need that sometimes exists for running the channels in the nighttime. Four range lights are necessary as additional aids for running these channels, two in the vicinity of Germania Park to mark the channel leading from the International Bridge to the Strawberry Island Cut, and two on the lowland lying between the Erie Canal and the river to the north of and marked by the axis of the cut. It is estimated that these four lights can be established for the sum of $13,000, which includes the cost of the land required for sites for the structures. The Board therefore recommends that an appropriation of this amount be made therefor."

Two range lights are provided to Isle Aux Peches to mark the 20-foot channel in Lake St. Clair, Michigan.

LIGHT-KEEPERS' DWELLINGS AT BUFFALO, N. Y.

Dwellings are also authorized at Buffalo, N. Y., for the keepers of the light-house on Horseshoe Reef, entrance to Buffalo Harbor. They are necessary for the comfort and convenience and proper housing of the men employed in attending to the lights. The Light-House Board, in its report on this provision, says:

77. Horseshoe Reef, entrance to Buffalo Harbor, Lake Erie, New York.—The following recommendation was made in the Board's last three annual reports:

"This light-house, which is located on a reef at the head of the Niagara River, requires the services of two light keepers, who are alternately on duty at the station throughout the entire season of open navigation. The light is built on a crib, and the accommodations in it are limited. The trips to and from the mainland are made in a small rowboat, and the distance is about 1½ miles. During a large part of the season the trips are made under conditions of difficulty and danger, and the landing at the station is often perilous. Sometimes it is impossible to get to and from the station, and the keeper then on duty has to remain at the station until he can be relieved, which may be several days. The pay of the keeper is $560 and that of the assistant keeper $490 a year, and no dwelling on shore is furnished to either of them. It is one of the most comfortless and unattractive stations in the district, and it would be for the interest of the Government to furnish proper dwellings for the two keepers. The Board is of the opinion that a double dwelling should be built on the shore for the use of the keepers. Such a building could be built on Government land near the south pier, in close proximity to the dwelling occupied by the keeper of the main Buffalo light, where it would be very convenient for the keepers in connection with their duties at the light. It is estimated that such a dwelling could be built for $5,500, and the Board recommends that an appropriation of that amount be made therefor."

Owing to increases in the prices of materials and labor, it is now estimated that the dwelling would cost, approximately, $6,200, and the Board recommends that an appropriation of that amount be made therefor.

Light-house keepers' dwellings are also authorized at Tibbetts Point, on Lake Ontario; at Sheboygan, Wis., and at Menominee, Mich.

OTHER ITEMS PROVIDED.

Provision is also made for imperative needs of the Service on the New England coast, the South Atlantic and the Gulf coasts, and $100,000 is provided for the light stations and range lights at Honolulu Harbor and on the island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii.

It is to be regretted that it is deemed impossible to make more liberal provisions at this time for the Light-House Service. The increasing commerce of the country is fast overtaxing our present facilities. Larger ships are continually being built to be freighted with the product of the American farm and of the American mechanic. Larger vessels require more commodious docks, deeper and wider channels, properly buoyed and adequately lighted. The most important triumphs of our country, those that reflect the greatest glory upon its institutions and upon the people, are the triumphs achieved in peace rather than in the evil days of war. Necessary as it is to make proper provision for the maintenance of the Army and Navy in that condition that will insure their usefulness in time of stress, yet patriotic men must regret that the cost of their maintenance prevents the doing of many things that would result in everlasting benefit to the entire country. I would be inclined to be liberal rather than parsimonious in expending public funds for those things that conduce to the success of a people in peaceful pursuits. I would have every cultivated acre highly productive. I desire that the hum of industry should be heard incessantly throughout the land. I would have furnaces in full blast and factories so crowded with orders that there would be no fear of either a complete or partial shut down. I would adequately improve the rivers and harbors of the country, so that its commerce might safely be carried to the markets on the natural highways of commerce, and I would make liberal and, if need be, lavish appropriations to make those highways for those engaged in the navigation of ships, always a somewhat perilous employment, as safe as human agencies can make them. The preservation of life and property would be made more certain. The peace and happiness of those dependent on the men employed in navigation would be promoted, and the resulting good would be beneficial to the entire country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the bill is satisfactory to me. I wanted it explained, because some gentlemen wanted to know what it was about.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 6128. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pend d'Oreille River, in Stevens County, Wash., by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company;

S. 1739. An act granting a pension to Henry Sistrunk; and

S. 5670. An act granting an increase of pension to Isaac L. Duggar.

GOLD BULLION IN THE TREASURY.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 6022) to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of an act approved March 14, 1900, entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," be amended by striking from the first proviso of said section 6 the words "one hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty," and by adding, after the words "shall be suspended," the following: "but the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to coin, within reasonable time, any and all gold bullion held in said reserve fund in excess of $50,000,000," making the first proviso of said section 6 read as follows: "Provided, That whenever and so long as the gold coin held in the reserve fund in the Treasury for the redemption of the United States notes and Treasury notes shall fall and remain below $50,000,000 the authority to issue certificates as herein provided shall be suspended, but the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to coin, within reasonable time, any and all gold bullion held in said reserve fund in excess of $50,000,000."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. A second is demanded. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes none.

Accordingly, a second was ordered.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which, as I understand it, has the unanimous approval of the Finance Committee of the Senate and of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures of the House. It provides that the amount of bullion held in the Treasury uncoined may be $100,000,000 instead of $50,000,000. That is the substance of the provision. I will read the letter, or one of the letters of the Secretary of the Treasury, written in support of this measure. As I understand it, this bill was introduced in the Senate at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury. It passed the Senate, came to the House, and he has written this letter in support of it here:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 11, 1906.

DEAR SIR: Agreeable to your verbal request for a report on S. 6022, I beg to say:

Within the last thirty days 100 tons of gold bars have been imported. This sudden inflow of uncoined gold can be disposed of only in the reserve fund, and the law as it now stands suspends the issuance of gold certificates whenever the gold coin in the reserve fund is below $100,000,000. To relieve this rigidity the law ought to authorize the accumulation of at least $100,000,000 in gold bars in the fund. The last clause in the bill is important, I think, for in its absence the policy might be adopted of carrying $100,000,000 of gold bars in the reserve fund at all times, and then a repetition of unusual importations would cause a repetition of the present embarrassment.

Very truly, yours,

L. M. SHAW, Secretary.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON COINAGE, WEIGHTS, AND MEASURES,
House of Representatives.

The reason for this is set forth in the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1904, and also for 1906. In fact, this is something that the Secretary of the Treasury has been asking for for several years in his annual report. He says:

In my report of 1904 attention was called to the fact that the provision of the monetary act of March 14, 1900, requiring that whenever the gold coin in the redemption fund shall fall and remain below $100,000,000 the issue of gold certificates shall cease, virtually restricts the amount of bullion in the redemption fund to $50,000,000. No good purpose is served by arbitrarily fixing the proportions of coin and bullion in this fund, and it was probably unintentional. The law in its first section directs the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain a reserve fund of $150,000,000 "in gold coin and bullion," apparently leaving the relative proportions to the discretion of the Secretary. In another section, the purpose of which was to prevent the depletion of the fund below $100,000,000, the provision referred to is made. The security and effectiveness of the fund would not be diminished if this section was made to read that "whenever and so long as the gold coin and bullion held in the reserve fund in the Treasury for the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes shall fall and remain below $100,000,000," etc. There is practical convenience and advantage in having a considerable share of the gold in the reserve fund in the form of bullion. No important demand upon the Treasury for gold ever occurs except for export, and for that purpose bullion is always preferred by the shipper and is the most desirable form of payment for the Government, as it saves the cost of coinage. The law as it stands has the practical effect of limiting the Treasury holdings of bullion and of causing an unnecessary amount of coinage. I recommend the amendment of section 6 of the act of March 14, 1900, to read as above.

This bill provides for this amendment as suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury. It will be a convenience to the Treasury, and it will be a saving by limiting unnecessary coinage.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I believe the purpose of the bill is right, but it seems to me the method of amending the law selected by the committee of which the gentleman is chairman is a very unwise one. It provides that certain words shall be stricken out of the proviso to a certain section and certain other words inserted. It provides that certain other words shall be added. It is the hypodermic method of amending a law, which involves a good deal of labor in ascertaining subsequently what the law is and where it is. It will be necessary to examine two independent sections to find what one means. I do not intend to oppose the bill, but I believe in amending sections of the statutes the sections as amended ought always to be set out in the bill, so that they will be carried along in the revisions and reprints of the law, and save the necessity for comparing the old section with the new one.

Mr. SOUTHARD. This bill contains the proviso as it will read when amended.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It ought to set out the amended section, so that it can be carried along and supersede the original section, and can be understood from the reading of the single section.

Mr. SOUTHARD. This bill says that the proviso shall be amended by striking out certain words and inserting certain words, so as to make the proviso read as follows, and so forth.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The whole section as amended ought to be set out. That would very much promote the convenience of those who desire to investigate the meaning of the statute.

Mr. SOUTHARD. This is a Senate bill which came to the House.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is none the better because it is a Senate bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Inasmuch as this is an amendment to a proviso and the only part amended in the section is the proviso, why would it not be well as a matter of practice to omit from the bill when published the entire section sought to be amended and set it out in the report? It seems to me that there would be no purpose in having a long section repeated in the bill when it could be effected by printing the section in the report. A result of the proposed method would be to encumber needlessly the statutes when published.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand it, the bill does not change the reserve fund at all.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It simply gives the section greater elasticity.

Mr. SOUTHARD. It permits the holding of more bullion. As the law now stands there must be in the reserve fund one hundred millions of gold coin. This simply permits the holding of a larger proportion of that gold in the form of bullion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And thereby permits greater elasticity?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio to take a little more time explaining the details and the effect of this amendment. How much uncoined bullion is there now that will be coined under the second clause of this bill?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I do not know how much uncoined bullion there is in the Treasury now.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. There seems to be no limitation provided in this second section of the bill.

Mr. SOUTHARD. The law provides that at all times there must be one hundred millions of gold coin in the Treasury.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. The gentleman is talking about the reserve fund?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. But this bill has another provision directing the Secretary of the Treasury to proceed and coin without any limitation on it.

Mr. SOUTHARD. That is the law now.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I want to know the detailed effect of this amendment.

Mr. SOUTHARD. This amendment produces only one simple effect. Under the law as it now stands the reserve fund is $150,000,000. The law provides that $100,000,000 of that fund must be in coin.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. It doesn't state whether it shall be silver or gold?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Oh, yes; gold. There may be $5,000,000 in bars or uncoined gold. Now, the effect of this amendment is simply to change the proportion of coined and uncoined gold in the reserve fund, so that there may be of this $150,000,000 $100,000,000 of it in the form of gold bullion and only $50,000,000 of it in coin.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. My question was designed to call the gentleman's attention to the other clause in the bill, which directs the Secretary of the Treasury to proceed to coin a certain amount of uncoined bullion. How much of that is to be coined, how much is there that is uncoined, and what limits are there in the bill as to the amount of coinage to be accomplished by it?

Mr. SOUTHARD. It does not affect provisions relating to coinage at all. As the law now stands whenever bars of gold or gold in any form uncoined comes into the Treasury the law compels its coinage as fast as possible, as I understand it. Now, the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury is, and the provision of the bill is, that all over and above $100,000,000 which may be held in the form of gold bars shall be coined hereafter as heretofore. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

GRANTS OF LAND TO NEW MEXICO.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 18600) amending section 10 of an act of Congress approved June 21, 1898, to make certain grants of land to the Territory of New Mexico, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of an act of Congress approved June 21, 1898, to make certain grants of land to the Territory of New Mexico, and for other purposes, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. That the lands reserved for university purposes, including all saline lands, and sections 16 and 36, reserved for public schools, may be leased under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislative assembly of said Territory; but until the meeting of the next legislature of said Territory the governor, secretary of the Territory, and the solicitor-general shall constitute a board for the leasing of said lands, and all necessary expenses and costs incurred in the leasing, management, and protection of said lands and leases may be paid out of the proceeds derived from such leases. And it shall be unlawful to cut, remove, or appropriate in any way any timber growing upon the lands leased under the provisions of this act, and not more than one section of land shall be leased to any one person, corporation, or association of persons, except when in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior the leasing of a larger area is deemed advisable, and no lease shall be made for a longer period than five years, and all leases shall terminate on the admission of said Territory as a State; and all money received on account of such leases in excess of actual expenses necessarily incurred in connection with the execution thereof shall be placed to the credit of separate funds for the use of said institutions, and shall be paid out only as directed by the legislative assembly of said Territory and for the purposes indicated herein. The remainder of the lands granted by this act, except those lands which may be leased only as above provided, may be sold under such laws and regulations as may be hereafter prescribed by the legislative assembly of said Territory; and all such necessary costs and expenses as may be incurred in the management, protection, and sale of said lands may be paid out of the proceeds derived from such sales; and not more than one quarter section of land shall be sold to any one person, corporation, or association of persons, and no sale of said lands or any portion thereof shall be made for less than $1.25 per acre; and all money received on account of such sales, after deducting the actual expenses necessarily incurred in connection with the execution thereof, shall be placed to the credit of separate funds created for the respective purposes named in this act, and shall be used only as the legislative assembly of said Territory may direct, and only for the use of the institutions or purposes for which the respective grants of lands are made: Provided, That such legislative assembly may provide for leasing all or any part of the lands granted in this act on the same terms and under the same limitations prescribed above as to the lands that may be leased only; but all leases made under the provisions of this act shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and all investments made or securities purchased with the proceeds of sales or leases of lands provided for by this act shall be subject to like approval by the Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

USE OF WATERS IN COOSA RIVER, LOCK 4, ALABAMA.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 19473) authorizing the use of the waters in the Coosa River at Lock No. 4, in Alabama, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into contract with any individual or corporation, private or municipal, preference being given to riparian owners and their assigns, hereinafter designated "the contracting party," to complete the dam and forebay of the lock which has been partially constructed by the Government at Lock No. 4 on the Coosa River, the work to be done under his supervision and control, and in accordance with the present adopted project and any modification thereof that he may deem proper: Provided, That the contracting party shall furnish all materials, of every character, and pay for all labor required in the construction of said dam and forebay, which, upon completion, shall become the property of the United States, free of all costs, claims, or charges of any kind whatsoever: Provided further, That the terms of this act and any stipulation which the Secretary of War may deem necessary to safeguard the interests of navigation and other interests of the United States shall be embodied in any contract entered into as aforesaid.

SEC. 2. That the contracting party shall begin the said work within two years from the passage of this act and shall complete the same within four years from the date of commencing construction, and the Secretary of War may, upon reasonable diligence of the contracting party being shown, extend the time for completion, the Government reserving the right to commence and finish the work, if deemed advisable, at any time before it is commenced by the contracting party; or, if begun and not carried out in strict conformity to the directions of the Secretary of War, the Government may assume the completion of said work at its option, the cost of such completion to be paid by the contracting party: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall determine from time to time whether the work is being properly done.

SEC. 3. That in consideration of the completion of said dam and forebay, including buttresses and gates, free of cost to the Government, the contracting party is hereby granted such rights as the Government possesses to use the water power produced by said dam for manufacturing and other industrial purposes for a period of ninety-nine years: Provided, That the plans for the necessary works and structures to utilize said water power shall be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the right is reserved to the United States to construct, maintain, and operate a lock for navigation purposes in connection with said dam and forebay, and nothing shall be done in the use of the water from said dam or otherwise to interfere with or in any way impede or retard the operation of said lock or the proper and complete navigation of the river at all times, nor in any way to interfere with the use and control of the same by the United States or the maintenance of the water surface above the dam at the established pool level; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to prescribe regulations to govern the use of the said water power and the operations of the plant and force employed in connection therewith; and no claim shall be made against the United States for any failure of water power resulting from any cause whatsoever: Provided further, That the contracting party shall furnish to the United States, free of cost, such electric current as may be necessary for operating the Government lock, in case the same shall be built, and lighting its buildings and grounds: And provided further, That the contracting party may have ingress and egress over Government lands in the construction and operation of plant.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of War may require the contracting party to execute a bond, with proper securities, before the commencement of the work, in such amount as he may consider necessary, to insure the beginning, prosecution, and completion of the work and compliance with the terms and requirements of this act, and in case of failure to comply with the requirements of said bond the contracting party shall forfeit to the United States the full amount thereof: Provided, That a suitable force of inspectors shall be employed on the work by the Secretary of War, at the expense of the United States, to see that the plans and specifications and the terms and requirements of the act and the conditions of the contract are strictly carried out, and any expense incurred by the United States in maintaining said inspectors shall be paid from any funds available pertaining to the appropriations made by Congress for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

SEC. 5. That Congress reserves the right to revoke the rights and privileges conferred by this act; but in the event of such revocation the United States shall pay to the contracting party, as full compensation, the reasonable value, exclusive of any franchise that may be required under this act, of all properties erected and lands purchased by them, necessary for the enjoyment of the benefits hereby conferred, such value to be determined by mutual agreement between the Secretary of War and the owners of said properties, and in case they can not agree, then by proceedings in condemnation, to be instituted in the proper United States court: Provided, That to insure compliance with the terms of the contract, or to protect the interests of navigation and other interests of the United States, the Secretary of War shall have power, at any time before or after the completion of the work, to order a suspension of all privileges granted by this act, and compliance with such order may be enforced by injunction of the court of the United States exercising jurisdiction in the district in which the work is situated, and proper proceedings to this end shall be instituted by the Attorney-General upon request of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 6. That nothing in this act shall be construed as in any way abridging the exclusive jurisdiction and control by the United States over the Coosa River, and of any structures therein, nor as repealing or modifying any of the provisions of law now existing for the protection of navigation.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] No second being demanded, the question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

GRANTING LAND TO ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 18333) granting land to the city of Albuquerque for public purposes, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a patent shall be, and hereby is, authorized to be issued to the city of Albuquerque, in the county of Bernalillo, Territory of New Mexico, for south half of section 17 and north half of section 20, in township 10 north, of range 4 east, New Mexico principal meridian, containing 640 acres, more or less, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre therefor, and upon the submission of due proof of the incorporation of said city, said land to be used for park and other public purposes only, and the patent to contain the provision that the land shall revert to the United States whenever it shall not be used for the purposes mentioned in this act.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] No second being demanded, the question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

OPENING OF COEUR D'ALENE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 17884) to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the Coeur D'Alene Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, and for other purposes, as amended, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, as hereinafter provided, to sell or dispose of unallotted lands in the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho.

SEC. 2. That as soon as the lands embraced within the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation shall have been surveyed, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause allotments of the same to be made to all persons belonging to or having tribal relations on said Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, to each man, woman, and child 160 acres, and, upon the approval of such allotments by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall cause patents to issue therefor under the provisions of the general allotment law of the United States.

SEC. 3. That upon the completion of said allotments to said Indians the residue of surplus lands—that is, lands not allotted or reserved for Indian school, agency, or other purposes—of the said Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation shall be classified under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior as agricultural lands, grazing lands, or timber lands, and shall be appraised under their appropriate classes by legal subdivisions, and, upon completion of the classification and appraisement, such surplus lands shall be opened to settlement and entry, under the provisions of the homestead laws, at not less than their appraised value, in addition to the fees and commissions now prescribed by law for the disposition of lands of the value of $1.25 per acre, by proclamation of the President, which proclamation shall prescribe the manner in which these lands shall be settled upon, occupied, and entered by persons entitled to make entry thereof: Provided, That the price of said lands when entered shall be fixed by the appraisement, as herein provided for, which shall be paid in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior upon the following terms: One-fifth of the purchase price to be paid in cash at the time of entry and the balance in five equal annual installments to be paid in one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, from and after the date of entry, and in case any entryman fails to make the annual payments, or any of them, promptly when due all rights in and to the land covered by his or her entry shall cease, and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited and the entry canceled, and the lands shall be reoffered for sale and entry: Provided, That the right to commute by said entryman shall be allowed as to any lands classified as agricultural and grazing lands, but the entryman, upon commutation, shall not be required to pay in the aggregate any sum in excess of the appraised value of such lands; and nothing in this act shall be held to repeal or extend the provisions of the homestead laws permitting the entryman to cut and remove, or cause to be cut and removed, so much timber as is actually necessary for buildings, fences, and other improvements on the land entered: Provided further, That the general mining laws of the United States shall extend to any of said lands and mineral entry may be made on any of said lands, but no such mineral selection shall be permitted upon any lands allotted in severalty to the Indians: Provided further, That the lands remaining undisposed of at the expiration of five years from the opening of the said lands to entry shall be sold to the highest bidder for cash, at not less than $1 per acre, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and that any lands remaining unsold ten years after the said lands shall have been opened to entry may be sold to the highest bidder for cash without regard to the above minimum limit of price: And provided further, That sections 16 and 36 of said lands be, and they are hereby, excepted from the foregoing provisions and are hereby granted to the State of Idaho for school purposes, and the United States shall pay to said Indians therefor the sum of $1.25 per acre: And provided also, That if the State of Idaho has made any selections under existing law in lieu of sections 16 and 36 of the lands affected by this act the acreage of such selections shall be deducted from the acreage to be paid for under the preceding proviso.

SEC. 4. That the said lands shall be opened to settlement and entry by proclamation of the President, which proclamation shall prescribe the time when and the manner in which these lands may be settled upon, occupied, and entered by persons entitled to make entry thereof, and no person shall be permitted to settle upon, occupy, and enter any of said lands except as prescribed in such proclamation.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior shall reserve from said lands, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, such tracts for town-site purposes as in his opinion may be required for the future public interests, and he may cause any such reservations, or parts thereof, to be surveyed into blocks and lots of suitable size, and to be appraised and disposed of under such regulations as he may prescribe, and the net proceeds derived from the sale of such lands shall be paid to said Indians as provided in section 7 of this act.

SEC. 6. That the net proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of the lands aforesaid, including the sums paid for mineral and townsite lands, shall be, after deducting the expenses incurred from time to time in connection with the allotment, appraisement, and sales and surveys herein provided, deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Coeur d'Alene and confederated tribes of Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, and shall be expended for their benefit, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the education and improvement of said Indians and in the purchase of stock cattle, horse teams, harness, wagons, mowing machines, horserakes, thrashing machines, and other agricultural implements for issue to said Indians, and also for the purchase of material for the construction of houses or other necessary buildings, and a reasonable sum may also be expended by the Secretary, in his discretion, for the comfort, benefit, and improvement of said Indians: Provided, That a portion of the proceeds may be paid to the Indians in cash per capita, share and share alike, if in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior such payments will further tend to improve the condition and advance the progress of said Indians, but not otherwise: Provided, That any sums placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, which interest shall be expended in the same manner as the principal.

SEC. 7. That any of said lands necessary for agency, school, and religious purposes, including any lands now occupied by the agency buildings, and the site of any sawmill, gristmill, or other mill property on said lands are hereby reserved for such uses so long as said land shall be occupied for the purposes above designated: Provided, That all such reserved lands shall not exceed in the aggregate three sections and must be selected in legal subdivisions conformable to the public surveys, such selection to be under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and subject to his approval.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby vested with full power and authority to make all needful rules and regulations as to the manner of sale, notice of same, and other matters incident to the carrying out of the provisions of this act, and with authority to reappraise and reclassify said lands if deemed necessary from time to time, and to continue making sales of the same, in accordance with the provisions of this act, until all of the lands shall have been disposed of.

SEC. 9. That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to bind the United States to find purchasers for any of said lands, it being the purpose of this act merely to have the United States to act as trustee for said Indians in the disposition and sales of said lands and to expend or pay over to them the net proceeds derived from the sales as herein provided.

SEC. 10. That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to allot, classify, appraise, and conduct the sale and entry of said lands as in this act provided the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sales of the aforesaid lands: Provided, That when funds shall have been procured from the first sales of the land the Secretary of the Interior may use such portion thereof as may be actually necessary in conducting future sales and otherwise carrying out the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] No second being demanded, the question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill as amended was passed.

SELECTION OF JURORS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 19379) providing for the manner of selecting and impaneling juries in the United States courts in the Territory of New Mexico, as amended, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of June 30, 1879, chapter 52, providing for the manner of selecting and impaneling juries in the United States courts, together with the several acts amendatory thereof, be, and the same is hereby, made applicable to the courts of the United States in the Territory of New Mexico sitting for the trial of causes and offenses arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] No second being demanded, the question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill as amended was passed.

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN PROPERTY IN HAWAII.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 5513) to provide for the disposition of certain property in the Territory of Hawaii, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all personal and movable property ceded and transferred to the United States by the Republic of Hawaii under the joint resolution of annexation approved July 7, 1898, may be sold, leased, or otherwise disposed of in such manner as may be provided by the laws of the Territory of Hawaii: Provided, That all sales, leases, or other disposals of such property heretofore made by said Territory, under the authority of such laws, are hereby ratified and confirmed, and all moneys or revenues derived from sales or disposals heretofore made, or made under authority of this act, shall remain the property of said Territory.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] No second being demanded, the question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

DAM ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, MORRISON COUNTY, MINN.

Mr. BUCKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 17758) permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River, in the county of Morrison, State of Minnesota, as amended, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to The Pike Rapids Power Company, a Minnesota corporation, its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain across the Mississippi River a dam, canal, and works necessary incident thereto for water power and supply purposes at any point between section 20, township 128 north, range 29 west, and section 17, in township 39, range 32, in Morrison County, Minn.: Provided, That the plans for the construction of said dam and appurtenant works shall be submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War before the commencement of the construction of the same: And provided further, That the said The Pike Rapids Power Company, its successors or assigns, shall not deviate from such plans after such approval, either before or after the completion of said structures, unless the modification of such plans shall have previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That there shall be placed and maintained in connection with said dam a sluiceway so arranged as to permit logs, timber, and lumber to pass around, through, and over said dam without unreasonable delay or hindrance, and without toll or charges: And provided further, That the dam shall be so constructed that the Government of the United States may at any time construct in connection therewith a suitable lock for navigation purposes, and may at any time, without compensation, control the said dam so far as shall be necessary for purposes of navigation, but shall not destroy the water power developed by said dam and structures to any greater extent than may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation, and that the Secretary of War may at any time require and enforce, at the expense of the owners, such modifications and changes in the construction of said dam as he may deem advisable in the interest of navigation.

SEC. 2. That suitable fishways, to be approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, shall be constructed and maintained at said dam by said corporation, its successors or assigns.

SEC. 3. That in case any litigation arises from the building of said dam, or from the obstruction of said river by said dam or appurtenant works, cases may be tried in the proper courts as now provided for that purpose in the State of Minnesota, or in the courts of the United States: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers, or to exempt said structures from the operation of same.

SEC. 4. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and the same shall become null and void unless the construction of the dam hereby authorized is commenced within one year after the passage of this act and completed within three years thereafter.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BUCKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering a second. The gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. BUCKMAN, and the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. WILLIAMS, will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, noes 0.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and one gentlemen present—a quorum. The ayes have it, and a second is ordered. The gentleman from Minnesota is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi to twenty minutes.

Mr. BUCKMAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY].

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to make any remarks upon the bill that is under consideration, but I would like to submit some remarks on the bill H. R. 8889 [applause], which has reference——

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BUCKMAN. I did; five minutes time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman does not desire to address himself to the bill under consideration, but desires to make a few remarks about some other bill. I desire to call the Chair's attention to the fact that we are not in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Debate must be confined to the bill, if objection is made.

Mr. BUCKMAN. I will state, then, Mr. Speaker, this bill gives permission to build a dam across the Mississippi River in Morrison County, in the State of Minnesota——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman some questions. Is this dam to be on a navigable portion of the river?

Mr. BUCKMAN. No, sir; it is not navigable at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not navigable there at all?

Mr. BUCKMAN. No, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And there is no possibility in the future of its interfering with navigation?

Mr. BUCKMAN. Not at all. There is a dam now built a few miles both above and below the proposed location.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I called for a second so as to get information upon this subject. We have passed some bills here giving permission to build some dams in stretches where we ran the risk possibly of interfering with navigation.

Mr. BUCKMAN. I will say to the gentleman this is not navigable.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

DAM ACROSS GOOSE CREEK IN BERKELEY COUNTY, S. C.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk with the committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill and amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the right, power, and privilege to construct, erect, and maintain a dam across the said Goose Creek is here authorized, granted, and given to the said the Charleston Light and Water Company, its successors and assigns: Provided, That the said Charleston Light and Water Company shall be liable for all such damages as may be established in any court of competent jurisdiction by any landowner claiming that his land had been damaged by reason of the erection of the said dam: And provided further, That nothing herein shall impair any navigation or other rights of any riparian owner, other than the closing of said creek, by the construction, erection, and maintenance of said dam at said location.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, and repeal this act, and the right to require the alteration or removal of the structure authorized without any liability on the part of the United States, are hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

A second not being demanded, the question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

ENLARGING AUTHORITY OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any funds which have been, or may hereafter be, appropriated by Congress for improving the Mississippi River between the Head of the Passes and the mouth of the Ohio River, and which may be allotted to levees, may be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for levees upon any of said river between the Head of Passes and Cape Girardeau, Mo.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

A second not being demanded, the question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

DIVISION OF LANDS OF THE OSAGE INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and put upon its passage the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the roll of the Osage tribe of Indians, as shown by the records of the United States in the office of the United States Indian agent at the Osage Agency, Okla., as it existed on the 1st day of January, 1906, and all children born between January 1, 1906, and July 1, 1907, to persons whose names are on said roll on January 1, 1906, and all children whose names are not now on said roll, but who were born to members of the tribe whose names were on the said roll on January 1, 1906, including the children of members of the tribe who have, or have had, white husbands, is hereby declared to be the roll of said tribe and to constitute the legal membership thereof: Provided, That the principal chief of the Osages shall, within three months from and after the approval of this act, file with the Secretary of the Interior a list of the names which the tribe claims were placed upon the roll by fraud, but no name shall be included in said list of any person or his descendants that was placed on said roll prior to the 31st day of December, 1881, the date of the adoption of the Osage constitution, and the Secretary of the Interior, as early as practicable, shall carefully investigate such cases and shall determine which of said persons, if any, are entitled to enrollment; but the tribe must affirmatively show what names have been placed upon said roll by fraud; but where the rights of persons to enrollment to the Osage roll have been investigated by the Interior Department and it has been determined by the Secretary of the Interior that such persons were entitled to enrollment, their names shall not be stricken from the roll for fraud except upon newly discovered evidence; and the Secretary of the Interior shall have authority to place on the Osage roll the names of all persons found by him, after investigation, to be so entitled, whose applications were pending on the date of the introduction of this bill in the House of Representatives, namely, February 21, 1906; and the said Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to strike from the said roll the names of persons or their descendants which he finds were placed thereon by or through fraud, and the said roll as above provided, after the revision and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, as herein provided, shall constitute the approved roll of said tribe; and the action of the Secretary of the Interior in the revision of the roll as herein provided shall be final, and the provisions of the act of Congress of August 15, 1894, 28 Statutes at Large, page 305, granting persons of Indian blood who have been denied allotments the right to appeal to the courts, are hereby repealed as far as the same relate to the Osage Indians; and the tribal lands and tribal funds of said tribe shall be equally divided among the members of said tribe as hereinafter provided: Provided further, That said list shall contain the names of persons now on the Osage roll heretofore investigated by the Secretary of the Interior and whose right to be on said roll was sustained by him unless new and material evidence is submitted.

SEC. 2. That all lands belonging to the Osage tribe of Indians in Oklahoma Territory, except as herein provided, shall be divided among the members of said tribe, giving to each his or her fair share thereof in acres, as follows:

First. Each member of said tribe, as shown by the roll of membership made up as herein provided, shall be permitted to select 160 acres of land as a first selection; and the adult members shall select their first selections and file notice of the same with the United States Indian agent for the Osages within three months after the approval of this act: Provided, That all selections of lands heretofore made by any member of said tribe, against which no contest is pending, be, and the same are hereby, ratified and confirmed as one of the selections of such member. And if any adult member fails, refuses, or is unable to make such selection within said time, then it shall be the duty of the United States Indian agent for the Osages to make such selection for such member or members. That all said first selections for minors shall be made by the United States Indian agent for the Osages: Provided, That said first selections for minors having parents may be made by said parents, and the word "minor" or "minors" used in this act shall be held to mean those who are under 21 years of age: And provided further, That all children born to members of said tribe between January 1, 1906, and the 1st day of January, 1907, shall have their selections made for them within six months after approval of this act, or within six months after their respective births. That all children born to members of said tribe on and after the 1st day of January, 1907, and before the 1st day of July, 1907, shall have their selections made for them on or before the last day of July, 1907, the proof of birth of such children to be made to the United States Indian agent for the Osages.

Second. That in making his or her first selection of land, as herein provided for, a member shall not be permitted to select land already selected by, or in possession of, another member of said tribe as a first selection, unless such other member is in possession of more land than he and his family are entitled to for first selections under this act; and in such cases the member in possession and having houses, orchards, barns, or plowed land thereon shall have the prior right to make the first selection: Provided, That where members of the tribe are in possession of more land than they are entitled to for first selections herein, said members shall have sixty days after the approval of this act to dispose of the improvements on said lands to other members of the tribe.

Third. After each member has selected his or her first selection as herein provided, he or she shall be permitted to make a second selection of 160 acres of land in the manner herein provided for the first selection.

Fourth. After each member has selected his or her second selection of 160 acres of land as herein provided, he or she shall be permitted to make a third selection of 160 acres of land in the manner herein provided for the first and second selections: Provided, That all selections herein provided for shall conform to the existing public surveys in tracts of not less than 40 acres, or a legal subdivision of a less amount, designated a "lot." Each member of said tribe shall be permitted to designate which of his three selections shall be a homestead, and his certificate of allotment and deed shall designate the same as a homestead, and the same shall be inalienable and nontaxable until otherwise provided by act of Congress. The other two selections of each member, together with his share of the remaining lands allotted to the member, shall be known as surplus land, and shall be nontaxable and inalienable for twenty-five years, and shall be designated as surplus lands.

Fifth. After each member has selected his or her first, second, and third selections of 160 acres of land, as herein provided, the remaining lands of said tribe in Oklahoma Territory, except as herein provided, shall be divided as equally as practicable among said members by a commission to be appointed to supervise the selection and division of said Osage lands.

Sixth. The selection and division of lands herein provided for shall be made under the supervision of, or by, a commission consisting of three members of the Osage tribe, to be selected by the Osage council, and a person to be selected by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and one other person to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior; and said commission shall settle all controversies between members of the tribe relative to said selections of land; and the schedules of said selections and division of lands herein provided for shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. The surveys, salaries of said commission, and all other proper expenses necessary in making the selection and division of land as herein provided shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior, out of any Osage funds derived from the sale of town lots royalties from oil, gas, or other minerals, or rents from grazing land.

Seventh. That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, at the request and upon the petition of any adult member of the tribe, may issue to such member a certificate of competency, authorizing him to sell and convey any of the lands deeded him by reason of this act, except his homestead, which shall remain inalienable and untaxable for a period of twenty-five years, or during the life of the homestead allottee, if upon investigation, consideration, and examination of the request he shall find any such member fully competent and capable of transacting his or her own business and caring for his or her own individual affairs: Provided, That upon the issuance of such certificate of competency the lands of such member (except his or her homestead) shall become subject to taxation, and such member, except as herein provided, shall have the right to manage, control, and dispose of his or her lands the same as any citizen of the United States: Provided further, That nothing herein shall authorize the sale of the oil, gas, coal, or other minerals covered by said lands, said minerals being reserved to the use of the tribe for a period of twenty-five years, and the royalty to be paid to said tribe as hereinafter provided: And provided further, That the oil, gas, coal, and other minerals upon said allotted lands shall become the property of the individual owner of said land at the expiration of said twenty-five years, unless otherwise provided for by act of Congress.

Eighth. There shall be reserved from selection and division, as herein provided, 160 acres on which the St. Louis School, near Pawhuska, is located, and the 160 acres on which the St. John's School, on Hominy Creek, Osage Indian Reservation, is located, said tracts to conform to the public surveys; and said tracts of land are hereby set aside and donated to the order of the Sisters of St. Francis; and said tracts shall be conveyed to said order, the Sisters of St. Francis, as early as practicable, by deed. There shall also be reserved from selection and division the quarter section of land, conforming to the public surveys, near Gray Horse, on which are located the dwelling houses of John N. Florer, Walter O. Florer, and John L. Bird; and said John N. Florer shall be allowed to purchase said quarter section of land at the appraised value placed thereon by the Osage Allotting Commission, the proceeds of the sale to be placed to the credit of the Indians and to be distributed like other funds herein provided for.

Ninth. There shall be reserved from selection and division, as herein provided, the northeast quarter of section 3, township 25, range 9 east, of the Indian meridian, and 160 acres to conform to the public survey at the town of Gray Horse, including the Government doctor's building, other valuable buildings, and the cemetery, and the 160 acres to conform to the public survey, adjoining or near the town site of Hominy. Said lands or tracts are hereby set aside for the use and benefit of the Osage Indians, exclusively, for dwelling purposes, for a period of twenty-five years from and after the 1st day of January 1907: Provided, That said land may, in the discretion of the Osage tribe, be sold under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; and the proceeds of the same under such sale shall be apportioned and placed to the credit of the individual members of the tribe according to the roll herein provided for.

Tenth. The Osage Boarding School reserve of 87$\frac{4}{5}$ acres, and the reservoir reserve of 17$\frac{7}{8}$ acres, and the agent's residence reserve, together with all the buildings located on said reservations in the town site of Pawhuska, as shown by the official plat of the same, are hereby reserved from selection and division as herein provided; and the same may be sold in the discretion of the Osage tribe, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide; and the proceeds of such sale shall be apportioned and placed to the credit of the individual members of said tribe according to the roll herein provided for.

Eleventh. That the United States Indian agent's office building, the Osage council building, and all other buildings which are for the occupancy and use of Government employees, in the town of Pawhuska, together with the lots on which the said buildings are situated, shall be sold to the highest bidder as early as practicable, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; and with the proceeds he shall erect other suitable buildings for the uses mentioned, on such sites as he may select, the remaining proceeds, if any, to be placed to the credit of the individual members of the Osage tribe of Indians: Provided, That the house known as the "chief's house," together with the lot or lots on which said house is located, and the house known as the "United States interpreter's house," in Pawhuska, Okla., together with the lot or lots on which said houses are located, shall be reserved from sale to the highest bidder and shall be sold to the principal chief of the Osages and the United States interpreter for the Osages, respectively, at the appraised value of the same, said appraisement to be made by the Osage town-site commission.

Twelfth. That the cemetery reserve of 20 acres in the town site of Pawhuska, as shown by the official plat thereof, is hereby set aside and donated to the town of Pawhuska for the purpose of sepulture, on condition that if said cemetery reserve of 20 acres, or any part thereof, is used for purposes other than that of sepulture the whole of said cemetery reserve of 20 acres shall revert to the use and benefit of the individual members of the Osage tribe, according to the roll herein provided, or to their heirs; and said tract shall be conveyed to the said town of Pawhuska by deed, and said deed shall recite and set out in full the conditions under which the above donation and conveyance are made.

That the provisions of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1905, be, and the same are hereby, continued in full force and effect.

SEC. 3. That the oil, gas, coal, or other minerals covered by the lands for the selection and division of which provision is herein made are hereby reserved to the Osage tribe for a period of twenty-five years from and after the 8th day of April, 1906, and leases for all oil, gas, and other minerals covered by selections and division of land herein provided for may be made by the Osage tribe of Indians through its tribal council and with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That the royalties to be paid to the members of the Osage tribe under any mineral lease so made shall be determined by the President of the United States: And provided further, That no mining of or prospecting for any of said mineral or minerals shall be permitted on the homestead selections herein provided for without the written consent of the member of the Osage tribe entitled thereto and the approval of the United States Indian agent for the Osages.

SEC. 4. That all funds belonging to the Osage tribe, and all moneys due, and all moneys that may become due, or may hereafter be found to be due the said Osage tribe of Indians, shall be held in trust by the United States for the period of twenty-five years from and after the 1st day of January, 1907, except as hereinafter provided:

First. That all the funds of the Osage tribe of Indians, and all the moneys now due or that may hereafter be found to be due to the said Osage tribe of Indians, and all moneys that may be received from the sale of their lands in Kansas under existing laws, and all moneys found to be due to said Osage tribe of Indians on claims against the United States, after all proper expenses are paid, shall be segregated as soon after January 1, 1907, as is practicable and placed to the credit of the individual members of the said Osage tribe on a basis of a pro rata division among the members of said tribe, as shown by the authorized roll of membership as herein provided for, or to their heirs as hereinafter provided, said credit to draw interest as now authorized by law; and the interest that may accrue thereon shall be paid quarterly to the members entitled thereto, except in the case of minors, in which case the interest shall be paid quarterly to the parents until said minor arrives at the age of 21 years: Provided, That if the Commissioner of Indian Affairs becomes satisfied that the said interest of any minor is being misused or squandered he may withhold the payment of such interest: And provided further, That said interest of minors whose parents are deceased shall be paid to their legal guardians, as above provided.

Second. That the royalty received from oil, gas, coal, and other mineral leases upon the lands for which selection and division are herein provided, and all moneys received from the sale of town lots, together with the buildings thereon, and all moneys received from the sale of the three reservations of 160 acres each heretofore reserved for dwelling purposes, and all moneys received from grazing lands, shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the members of the Osage tribe of Indians as other moneys of said tribe are to be deposited under the provisions of this act, and the same shall be distributed to the individual members of said Osage tribe according to the roll provided for herein, in the manner and at the same time that payments are made of interest on other moneys held in trust for the Osages by the United States, except as herein provided.

Third. There shall be set aside from the royalties received from oil and gas not to exceed $50,000 per annum for ten years from the 1st day of January, 1907, for the support of the Osage Boarding School and for other schools on the Osage Indian Reservation conducted or to be established and conducted for the education of Osage children.

Fourth. There shall be set aside and reserved from the royalties received from oil, gas, coal, or other mineral leases, and moneys received from the sale of town lots, and rents from grazing lands not to exceed $30,000 per annum for agency purposes and an emergency fund for the Osage tribe, which shall be paid out from time to time, upon the requisition of the Osage tribal council, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior shall furnish to the Osage tribe of Indians, on or before January 1, 1907, copies of all treaties and a complete record of all transactions of every character between the United States and the said Osage tribe of Indians, and all acts of the United States, or its officials, relating to the Osage Indians or their affairs or interests.

SEC. 6. That at the expiration of the period of twenty-five years from and after the 1st day of January, 1907, the lands, mineral interests, and moneys herein provided for and held in trust by the United States shall be the absolute property of the invidual members of the Osage tribe, according to the roll herein provided for, or their heirs, as herein provided, and deeds to said lands shall be issued to said members, or to their heirs, as herein provided, and said moneys shall be distributed to said members, or to their heirs, as herein provided, and said members shall have full control of said lands, moneys, and mineral interests.

SEC. 7. That the lands, moneys, and mineral interests, herein provided for, of any deceased member of the Osage tribe shall descend to his or her legal heirs, according to the laws of the Territory of Oklahoma, or of the State in which said reservation may be hereinafter incorporated, except where the decedent leaves no issue, nor husband nor wife, in which case said lands, moneys, and mineral interests must go to the mother and father equally.

SEC. 8. That the lands herein provided for are set aside for the sole use and benefit of the individual members of the tribe entitled thereto, or to their heirs, as herein provided; and said members, or their heirs, shall have the right to use and to lease said lands for farming, grazing, or any other purpose not otherwise specifically provided for herein, and said members shall have full control of the same: Provided, That parents of minor members of the tribe shall have the control and use of said minors' lands, together with the proceeds of the same, until said minors arrive at their majority: And provided further, That all leases given on said lands for the benefit of the individual members of the tribe entitled thereto, or for their heirs, shall be subject only to the approval of the United States Indian agent for the Osages.

SEC. 9. That all deeds to said Osage lands or any part thereof shall be executed by the principal chief for the Osages, but no such deeds shall be valid until approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 10. That the Osage Indian Reservation is hereby made a county, to be known as Osage County, of the Territory of Oklahoma, and that Pawhuska shall be the county seat of said county; and the manner and time of holding the first election of officers for said Osage County shall be provided by the governor of Oklahoma Territory within sixty days after the approval of this act; and the officers elected at said first election shall hold their respective offices like officers in other counties in said Territory and until their successors are provided for at the next general election in said Territory, according to the laws governing elections in other counties in said Territory: Provided, That all male persons residing in said Osage County and who have resided therein for at least six months and who are citizens of the United States or members of the Osage tribe of Indians, and who are not otherwise disqualified under the laws of Oklahoma Territory, are qualified electors and shall be competent persons to serve upon all juries in said county, and all juries in and for said county shall be drawn by open venire under the direction of the judge of the district court of said Osage County.

SEC. 11. That there shall be a biennial election of officers for the Osage tribe as follows: A principal chief, an assistant principal chief, and eight members of the Osage tribal council, said officers to be elected at a general election to be held in the town of Pawhuska, Okla., on the first Monday in June; and the first election for said officers shall be held on the first Monday in June, 1906, in the manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and said officers shall be elected for a period of two years, commencing on the 1st day of July following said election, and in case of a vacancy in the office of principal chief, by death, resignation, or otherwise, the assistant principal chief shall succeed to said office, and all vacancies in the Osage tribal council shall be filled in a manner to be prescribed by the Osage tribal council.

SEC. 12. That public highways or roads, two rods in width, being one rod on each side of all section lines, in the Osage Indian Reservation, may be established without any compensation therefor.

SEC. 13. That all lands taken or condemned by any railroad company in the Osage Reservation, in pursuance of any act of Congress or regulation of the Department of the Interior, for rights of way, station grounds, side tracks, stock pens and cattle yards, water stations, terminal facilities, and any other railroad purpose, shall be, and are hereby, reserved from selection and allotment and confirmed in such railroad companies for their use and benefit in the construction, operation, and maintenance of their railroads: Provided, That such railroad companies shall not take or acquire hereby any right or title to any oil, gas, or other mineral in any of said lands.

SEC. 14. That all things necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this agreement not otherwise herein specifically provided for shall be done under the authority and direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to demand a second——

Mr. ZENOR. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is the bill open for amendment?

The SPEAKER. No; the motion is to suspend the rule and pass the bill with amendments.

Mr. ZENOR. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma consent to an amendment to this bill? I desire to offer an amendment, and to this amendment I suppose there will be no serious objection, although it is a very important bill involving the partition and division of 1,400,000 acres of land among the Osage Indian tribes.

Mr. McGUIRE. I will have no objection to the gentleman's amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to get the amendment reported, because this motion is to suspend the rules and pass the bill with committee amendments.

Mr. ZENOR. I offer the following amendment——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields for the purpose of hearing the amendment for information?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not want the period for demanding a second to pass, as I want to reserve that right while I am getting some information about the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to reading the amendment for information?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 22, by adding after section 15 the following, to be numbered section 16:

"That this act shall be of full force and effect if ratified before the 1st day of December, 1906, by a majority of the adult male members of said tribe at the next general election of said tribe or at an election held for the purpose of voting upon the acceptance or rejection of said act; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make public proclamation that said act shall be voted on at the next general election of said tribe or at a special election called by said Secretary under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. At the said election all male members of said tribe over the age of 21 years qualified to vote under the tribal laws shall have the right to vote at the election precinct most convenient to their residence: Provided, That the votes cast at such election shall be forthwith certified to the Secretary of the Interior by the chief and the business committee of said tribe."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, as this bill was submitted to Congress by the tribe itself, after it had been voted on by the members of the tribe, I am satisfied there will be no objection on this side or by the members of the committee, at least, to having the bill resubmitted to the tribe.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me ask the gentleman a question in connection with the bill. Does this bill cut off the right of these people to enter the courts in order to determine their tribal relations?

Mr. CURTIS. There is no question about their tribal relations. They are continued for twenty-five years, and then they may be further extended by Congress if it sees fit.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman misunderstands me; but about which Indians shall be on the tribal roll? As I caught the reading, it gives authority in that respect to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CURTIS. To the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And he can purge the roll and do it when he pleases?

Mr. CURTIS. That is to be done——

Mr. WILLIAMS. One moment, and then the gentleman can answer it all at once. Now, if he can purge the roll and change it in any manner, then it would be possible that some Indian might be aggrieved or might think himself aggrieved, and if so, of course, he ought to have the right to assert his grievance in court and ought to have it determined.

Mr. CURTIS. There is no provision in this bill authorizing appeal to the courts to settle the question as to whom is entitled to enrollment. The bill does provide that the present roll will be taken as the roll of the tribe, except that the chief may file a complaint within a certain time alleging that certain people are there by fraud. That list shall not include any person whose case has been heard or tried heretofore. That complaint being filed, it is the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to carefully investigate and determine if fraud has been committed as to that particular list. I might say to the gentleman that there are but very few contested cases in the Osage Reservation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say, in the amendment submitted as the committee amendment, section 5 seems to have been stricken out.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Does the motion include that amendment also?

Mr. CURTIS. No. All of section 5 is to be left out of the bill. It should not have been read.

The SPEAKER. It was not read, and it was offered with the amendment striking out section 5.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One other question. Has this bill the unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. CURTIS. It has the unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs and has been considered by two subcommittees. It was drawn by the Osages and submitted to a vote of the tribe. They almost unanimously agreed to it. They sent delegations here representing both factions. They appeared before the committee and asked for its passage. The bill was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and met the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary, and was then considered, as I said before, by two subcommittees of the Committee on Indian Affairs and unanimously reported.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, Mr. Speaker, I shall not ask a second.

Mr. ZENOR. I understand the gentleman to state that this matter was submitted to the tribe for a vote. That does not include the pending bill, but was a prior bill that had been submitted.

Mr. CURTIS. No; this very bill. It was submitted to the tribe and by the tribe submitted to the committee.

Mr. ZENOR. Have there not been several amendments put on the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, yes; several committee amendments and Department amendments—five or six.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to another amendment, on page 22.

The SPEAKER. But first, is a second demanded?

Mr. CURTIS. If a second is demanded, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. ZENOR. I want to get my position clear with reference to this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's amendment is covered by the motion.

Mr. ZENOR. But, Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment I desire to offer as pending. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a second.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Oklahoma is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Indiana is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, as has been said, this measure was submitted to the Osage tribe of Indians, and they approved it by a practically unanimous vote; and, as I understand, those who did not vote for the provision of this bill were contending for just such a provision in the bill as is contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. As has been said, the bill was considered by the Interior Department and indorsed by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It has a unanimous report from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MURDOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. McGUIRE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MURDOCK. I only want to ask a question. It has been said often that the richest people in the world are the Osages. This bill proposes to segregate the funds now in the hands of the Government. Now, what is the population of the present Osage tribe, and what will each individual member get from the Government in the way of money?

Mr. CURTIS. There are about 1,800 Osages, in round numbers. They have $8,000,000 in the Treasury; but this bill does not make any payment to them. It simply places to the credit of each individual Indian his proportionate share of these funds; and there is nothing in the bill that authorizes the payment of the money to the individual except section 7, which provides that any adult member of the tribe may file an application, and if the Secretary of the Interior, upon investigation, finds such Indian competent and qualified to manage his own affairs, he may issue him a certificate of competency which will enable him to sell any of the lands deeded him except his homestead. This section does not apply to the funds.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does he draw any share of the interest?

Mr. CURTIS. He draws the interest every year, just the same as he does now.

Mr. MURDOCK. Has the gentleman any computation of what that share amounts to?

Mr. CURTIS. They get about $50 a quarter; about $200 annually for each individual Indian—man, woman, and child.

Mr. MURDOCK. On page 9 of the bill are certain exceptions which are made in favor of individuals, apparently.

Mr. CURTIS. That provision was put in on the recommendation of the Department of the Interior and carries several names. The Department made the recommendation because these people, as we were informed by the Secretary of the Interior, in an official letter, had made valuable improvements upon the reservation; and it is provided that they shall have the right to buy the land upon which they have made the improvements at the appraised value fixed by the Osage Commission, a majority of whom are to be Osage Indians.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma reserves the remainder of his time.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Speaker, I shall occupy but a few minutes. This bill, as suggested by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kansas, is a bill proposing to segregate and set apart the lands belonging to the Osage Indian tribe in Okahoma Territory, and also to divide the surplus funds, or the tribal trust funds, amongst the various members of the tribe. I believe the land embraces an area of about 1,400,000 acres. In this reservation there has been discovered one of the richest oil fields perhaps in this country; and it is now being held, a good portion of it, under leases granted heretofore by the tribe and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The only purpose, Mr. Speaker, for offering this amendment, to submit this act to the members of the tribe, is in order to enable the members of the tribe, and especially the full-blood Indians, thoroughly to understand the exact provisions of the bill.

Now, it is said by the gentleman from Kansas that this proposition has been submitted to the tribe and voted upon. There have been some bills prior to this one submitted to the tribe, and there was perhaps one of them voted upon; but there have been several bills introduced upon this subject—three or four different bills—and each of them contained different provisions in regard to the disposition and division of these lands. This bill as it is now prepared, with the amendments to it, has never been submitted to this tribe of Indians at any election. There has been quite a controversy going on as between what is known as the "full bloods" and what is known as the "mixed bloods," composing this particular tribe of Indians. They hold their lands a little differently from the lands held by most of the Indian tribes. They hold their lands by virtue of a purchase from the Cherokee tribe, having paid their money for it, and there is in this tribe, I believe, between 1,800 and 2,000 members, and about one-half of them are what are known as "full bloods," and the remainder of mixed bloods, and white persons made members of the tribe by adoption.

They, the full bloods, can neither speak nor understand the English language. They are compelled to rely entirely upon information given them by interpreters, and it is through this source that they become familiar with matters affecting their interest. The mixed bloods are a pretty smart set of fellows, able to speak English and able to transact their business. In addition, there is quite a large number of white persons who have been admitted to the tribe by the council, people who have no Indian blood at all in them, who share in the distribution of these funds and these lands. Now, it is claimed upon the part of the full-blood Indians that some of those who are better capable of conducting business and have a keener insight into driving bargains, and in locating their land, these white men who have married into the tribe, and some of the mixed bloods with very little Indian blood in them, have located their 160-acre allotments upon these oil lands, and that many of the full bloods, by reason of their incapacity to deal on equal terms with the white people, have been driven back onto the poorer lands of the reservation. Here is where the controversy has arisen and been carried on to a considerable extent between what are known as the full bloods and the mixed bloods and the white men belonging to the tribe. Now, some members of the tribe, I understand, some of the full bloods, claim that they do not understand the exact provisions of this act. It has been before the committee, has been amended, has been changed several times in consequence of a controversy going on between the members of the tribe, and it involves a pretty serious matter to these full-blood Indians as well as the others; but if the amendment which I have proposed is adopted, to submit this act to the tribe for their approval or rejection, the whole matter will be passed on at an election to be held under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and in that way those who are capable of voting under the tribal laws, those who are eligible to vote under the tribal laws of the nation, will have the opportunity to examine and pass upon the question whether or not this act is acceptable or otherwise.

If they decide by a majority that they are in favor of accepting this act, it will go into effect from and after the time that it is so accepted by the tribe, or perhaps from the date of its passage, as its operation will revert back to that date if approved. Certainly there can be no hardship in this, and certainly there can be no valid objection to it. It was formerly invariably the rule in reference to a treaty that was negotiated with a tribe of Indians that before it took effect, where changes were made in its provisions by any act of Congress—the Supreme Court, however, has held differently lately, but it used to be the recognized rule—where any changes were made in the agreement negotiated with the tribe, it should be submitted again to the tribe before it was held to be binding on the tribe.

With this amendment to it, I shall make no objection to the passage of the bill, although I do think it is a very serious mistake to predicate the apportionment or division of these lands upon the basis that this bill puts it. There are quarter sections in this reservation upon which numerous very rich oil wells have been dug that are now in operation, and this bill provides for a division of this land by acres and not according to value. There are other quarter sections in some portions of the reservation which are not worth, perhaps, $5 an acre. These rich lands are mostly located and settled upon by the whites and the mixed bloods of the tribe. They seem to have outgeneraled their less fortunate brother—the full blood—in the race of diligence and judgment in securing their locations. This bill provides that the member of the tribe occupying any quarter section of land at the date of taking effect of this act shall have the preference right to hold that land as his homestead or first selection, and this same rule is made to apply to each of his subsequent selections. Each member has three selections of 160 acres each, and he is required to designate within a certain fixed time which one of the three selections he will take as his homestead.

There is no way to get an equal distribution of this land according to value—according to the rule of partition and division of lands applied in our courts in the settlement of estates. In such cases the lands and improvements are appraised at their fair value, and the portion to which each party is entitled on the basis of value is set off to him in acres. But if these Indians approve the provisions of this act and this method of segregating their lands and funds at an election held by them under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, when it is submitted to them, I shall make no objection to it.

Mr. FINLEY. What will the white settlers pay for these lands that they have squatted upon and are now occupying? What will they pay under this bill?

Mr. ZENOR. They will not pay anything.

Mr. FINLEY. It is given to them as homesteads?

Mr. ZENOR. The bill provides that each member of the tribe shall have a right to make a selection of 160 acres, and they have a right to make three selections successively of 160 acres; and any Indian or member of the tribe residing on a particular quarter section at the time of the taking effect of this act, if it shall become a law, shall have the preference right to hold that as his first selection.

Mr. FINLEY. Are there not some white settlers in this area?

Mr. ZENOR. There are some who are admitted to membership of the tribe by virtue of ordinances passed by the Osage council, and such other procedure as is recognized by their tribal laws, quite a large number.

Mr. FINLEY. Will not this bill give to the Secretary of the Interior the authority to purge the rolls of such classes, if he sees fit?

Mr. ZENOR. No; it does not; not of his own initiative. It provides that the chief of the tribe shall, within three months after the passage of this act, make out a list of such persons as the tribe deems to be on the rolls fraudulently, and that list is submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, and he shall make an investigation, and if he finds that persons now upon the rolls have procured their enrollment fraudulently he may purge the rolls of those names. The provisions of the bill, however, place the onus of proof upon the tribe to show that the names of such persons included in such list were fraudulently placed thereon.

Mr. CURTIS. That was a provision the Indians themselves asked for.

Mr. ZENOR. Yes; that provision is included in the bill; and I believe no serious objection is made to it, but some of the full bloods wanted a different and more drastic provision in this matter.

Mr. FINLEY. All persons who have been added to the tribes since 1901?

Mr. CURTIS. Since the former action—since it was acted upon.

Mr. ZENOR. This provision authorizes the chief to submit a list including none back of that date. He is precluded from going back of that. There is a complaint, however, among the full bloods that some of these parties procured an enrollment prior to that date, but this bill forbids their going back.

Mr. CURTIS. Those cases were acted upon by the Secretary of the Interior fourteen years ago.

Mr. ZENOR. I think that is correct, but there was a controversy going on, and there were two reports made by parties sent down there to make an examination, and they differed about it.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman think the taking away the right to resort to the courts to settle the membership of this tribe is good policy?

Mr. ZENOR. In answer to the gentleman, in reference to that matter, it seems to have been universally conceded that they wanted the matter settled in this summary way, without appeal to the courts.

Mr. FINLEY. What is the status of this tribe of Indians in regard to the matter of citizenship? Have they the right to vote?

Mr. McGUIRE. They are still on unorganized territory.

Mr. FINLEY. They have the right to vote in Oklahoma Territory?

Mr. McGUIRE. No; they have no right to vote.

Mr. FINLEY. Will they have the right to vote when this bill is finally passed?

Mr. CURTIS. They will have the right to vote, but they are still in the hands of the Government for twenty-five years, the same as they are now, except the land is segregated and each individual is given a certificate of his proportionate share.

Mr. MURDOCK. What purpose is served by the segregating of this fund to the individuals?

Mr. ZENOR. This seems to be the desire of the majority of the members of the tribe.

Mr. MURDOCK. But to what end?

Mr. ZENOR. One of the reasons, among others, is that it will place to the credit of each member of the tribe an income derived from the proceeds on the different allotments, and this would be, in some instances of allottees, entirely different from the time the segregation takes place.

Mr. CURTIS. Let me say in answer to the gentleman that one thing that will be accomplished is this, and that is that it will do away with the great inducement that now exists for people to try to be admitted to the roll of that tribe and endeavor to establish claims against the tribe, because when the money is once segregated it can not be attacked by outside individuals.

Mr. MURDOCK. It closes the rolls?

Mr. ZENOR. It closes the rolls, and no person now has a right to question the rolls except on the suggestion of the chief, under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. How is the income of the oil lands now distributed?

Mr. ZENOR. It all goes into the tribal fund and is subject to be apportioned at the time the division is made of the tribal fund. They are paid into a trust fund in which all the members of the tribe share.

Mr. DE ARMOND. In other words, each individual gets his proportionate share?

Mr. ZENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. DE ARMOND. And when the division takes place the few will get the valuable oil lands and the others will get something else?

Mr. ZENOR. Yes, sir. That is my contention, and what I conceive to be the most objectionable feature to this bill; but, as I have said, if a majority of the adult members of the tribe approve it, they ought to be content.

Mr. CURTIS. No; the coal, oil, and gas is reserved for twenty-five years, and each individual will get his share for that time, and no lease can be made hereafter without the consent of the council, approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The oil, gas, and coal is reserved for twenty-five years for the benefit of the tribe.

Mr. ZENOR. And the proceeds of the leases go into the general fund to be apportioned?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. One other question. Will the Indians have the right to sit on juries?

Mr. ZENOR. Express provision is made in the bill for their sitting on juries.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired and the question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Speaker, before that question is put I desire to inquire as to the scope of the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma. Does that include the amendment I offered as section 16 and also my amendment to section 15, striking out the word "agreement," in line 11, page 22, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "act?"

The SPEAKER. The gentleman submitted his amendment, and it was accepted, and the motion operates on that. But the gentleman sent up a paper to the Clerk's desk, which is not included.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood that the gentleman from Indiana offered only one amendment, and that was to submit the proposition to the Indians, and that is included.

Mr. ZENOR. Then the amendment is covered by the motion, and it includes the amendment to strike out the word "agreement" and insert in lieu thereof the word "act."

The SPEAKER. But that amendment is not included unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. ZENOR. Does not the gentleman from Kansas concede that it ought to be so amended?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, if the word "agreement" is there, it should be "act."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment, and then the Speaker will put it to the House for unanimous consent.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "agreement," in line 11, page 22, and insert in lieu thereof the word "act."

The SPEAKER. Is unanimous consent granted that the motion shall cover that amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with the amendment.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill as amended was passed.

ALASKA CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 19037) to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Central Railway, and for other purposes, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the compliance by the Alaska Central Railway Company with the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of chapter 295 of the laws of the United States entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for the right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved May 14, 1898, by locating and completing its railroad in Alaska, is hereby extended, and the powers of said company are enlarged, as follows:

First. Said company shall have three years from the passage of this act within which to file a map of definite location, until which time all their rights originally secured by the filing of their plats of preliminary locations shall continue, and six years from the date of filing of such maps of definite location within which to complete said railroad to the Tanana River.

Second. That there is hereby granted to said company for terminal purposes and for the building of approaches, wharves, docks, warehouses, elevators, and such other structures as may be necessary for the conduct of the business of said railway, on and contiguous to the Tanana River and Yukon River, and at such points thereon as the company shall select, public land not exceeding 160 acres at each of said points and having a frontage in each of the said rivers not to exceed 1 mile; and a similar grant of land is hereby made to said company for intermediate division terminals at points on the line of its railway to be selected by it as most convenient for said intermediate division terminals and approximately 100 miles apart.

The land hereby granted shall be located and selected by said company, and its right shall attach thereto when it shall have filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior a plat thereof with a copy thereof in the local land office. Said company shall have the right to enter on and possess said lands immediately, but title shall not vest until the railroad of said company shall have been completed to said points, respectively. There is further hereby granted to said company for similar purposes, on Resurrection Bay, two parcels of public land, one of an area of 1.40 acres, and the other of an area of twenty-eight one-hundredths acre, which lie between the line of mean high tide on said bay and the east line of the present right of way of the Alaska Central Railway, and immediately east of the United States survey No. 726 south and United States survey No. 726 north, F. L. Ballaine soldier's additional homestead location, said two parcels being in addition to the land located by said company for terminal purposes on Resurrection Bay under the provisions of general law.

Third. There is hereby granted the said company the right to purchase at $1.25 an acre the reserve tract between the homestead locations of Scheffler and Ravell on the north shore of Resurrection Bay, said reserve tract having the same depth from the water front as the adjoining homestead locations.

Fourth. Said company shall have the right to locate its right of way along the navigable waters of Alaska and as near thereto as may be necessary for the safe, economical, and efficient construction and operation of its line of railway, any restriction, condition, reservation, or easement provided in, by, or under any act of Congress to the contrary notwithstanding, and the right of way for its railway is granted to said company on Resurrection Bay and at such other points as it may be found desirable to establish terminal facilities on, over, along, and across any roadway established along the shores of navigable waters under the act of Congress of May 14, 1898.

Fifth. Said company shall be exempt from license tax and tax on its railway and railway property during the period of construction and for five years thereafter: Provided, That the total period of exemption shall not exceed ten years from the time of the passage of this act.

Sixth. Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Seventh. Nothing herein contained shall be taken as vacating or impairing the reserved shore roadway and riparian rights provided for under the said act approved May 14, 1898.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. POWERS] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] will take their places as tellers. The question is on ordering a second.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 33.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and three gentlemen present, a quorum. The ayes have it, and a second is ordered, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. POWERS] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to twenty minutes.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to furnish some little aid toward the building of railroads in Alaska. The President of the United States, in his message, recommended that aid be furnished, and the Alaska Central is certainly deserving more than this bill provides. Several Alaskan companies came here and desired a guaranty of bonds, or rather, I should say, a general bill introduced in the interest of at least two roads to guarantee bonds was before the Committee on Territories. The committee deemed it not wise to do anything of that kind at present, but in reference to the Alaska Central Railroad, which has already completed 40 miles through a country where there are no settlers, or next to none, and which has 30 miles more under contract, which is struggling to open up that vast, and, in my judgment, a very valuable central section of Alaska, we have brought in a bill, first, that extends for three years the time within which they have to file certain completed plans and surveys and to construct the remainder of the read; and, second, to exempt the railroad and its property from taxation and the license tax of $100 per mile per annum during a certain number of years, not exceeding ten, while they are constructing the 463 miles of main line, where the conditions are such—the winters so severe—they can not work but half the year, to say nothing about the branches. Hence the committee felt ten years might go by or be consumed in its completion. It will be fortunate, indeed, for the people of this country and fortunate for Alaska if within ten years this road is constructed. There are some other little things favorable to the railroad company in this bill. There is a clause increasing the grant of land at two of the terminal stations; also another clause granting some infinitesimal pieces of land on the bay—little points which jut out beyond that which they already have under the general law and adjoining where they have located; but the two principal things in the bill are the extension of time and the exemption from the license tax. Climatic conditions imperatively demand a longer time, and the same rule that we have extended to the road on the Seward Peninsula should exempt from the license tax. It seems to me that if we can extend the aid—which is a mere bagatelle compared with what Congress has done for the Philippine roads—we should be doing a very proper thing to facilitate and hasten the settlement of Alaska, with its great resources yet to be developed, a country in which people of our own kith and kin are living and are bound to settle.

We should do something in aid of the opening up of that vast territory by the passage of this bill, and we want it developed, if possible, by American capital and Americans, and not by English capital and foreigners. The present road—the White Pass and Yukon—is an English road. Of course that road is fighting this and every other bill. Its agents, attorneys, etc., have been here for some time—not before the committee in the open, but we find them getting in their work in a more effective way, because this road will furnish a direct line to the Yukon and Tanana rivers that will come in competition with theirs, and, in the end, compel a great reduction in the price of freight to the interior of Alaska. Under those circumstances, Congress having already relieved the road on the Seward Peninsula from this tax or license, that bill having passed and become a law, it seemed to the committee that in aid of the development of this vast possession which has, in my judgment, more of mineral resources and more of wealth for the future than any other part of our country not developed, it was wise to grant these few requests, and therefore the committee favorably reported the bill.

Why, gentlemen, if the same desire, the same purpose not to aid a railroad in any form, shape, or manner or aid in the development or opening up of the country had been the rule years ago out on the plains where we now have cities probably the coyote would be digging his hole. Now, under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the extension of this time, the granting of small quantities of land more than they could under the general law obtain, some of it they buy at the usual price of a dollar and a quarter an acre, and the exemption from license tax during the time it will undoubtedly take to build the road—and we would be fortunate if it is all built by that time—would be a wise policy and are not much of a subsidy or inducement to the men and capitalists who are undertaking this great work. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask about the total amount of land granted. It is less than a thousand acres all told, is it not?

Mr. POWERS. The only land granted is this: At the two terminals, where they now have 40 acres under the law, they ask to have 160; that is an increase of 240 acres; and at two places along the road they ask some hundred acres where they have forty, and they ask for one other piece of land, which they buy at the usual price of a dollar and twenty-five cents an acre.

Mr. LOVERING. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. POWERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOVERING. Does this grant of land include any coal lands?

Mr. POWERS. There are no coal or mineral lands granted. It is only granted sufficient under the circumstances for a great line like this to have proper terminal facilities and enough land every some hundred miles along the road where it will be necessary to establish shops and other buildings for railroad purposes.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. May I ask the gentleman a question? What provision does this bill make in regard to right of way of this road? Does this road avail itself of the ordinary right of way for obtaining right of way over the public domain or is there a special right of way granted?

Mr. POWERS. This road is located under the general railroad law—applicable to all railroads in Alaska.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Then, this does not extend any extraordinary privilege to this road in this particular?

Mr. POWERS. Perhaps in one possible thing. There is a peculiar section of the general law, which might preclude the road from going along one of these navigable rivers more than 80 rods. It allows them to go along the river more than that and across public highways, provided for in the general law, and you will see there is a proviso at the end of the bill which says that it shall not in any way conflict with any right of those highways.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Has this road taken any steps to comply with the ordinary requirements of the law with reference to locating its right of way over the public domain?

Mr. POWERS. It has located and built 40 miles and has 30 miles more under contract.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Has it filed its application for right of way for the remainder, and has that right of way been approved?

Mr. POWERS. Whether it covers the whole line I do not know, but it asks for an extension of time for three years to file its completed survey as to part of it.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. In other words, does not this bill—and I am simply asking for information—in effect relieve this corporation from the necessity of complying with the regular ordinary law with reference to right of way over the public domain?

Mr. POWERS. It does not relieve them from anything whatever. They are subject to everything in the general law, but it states at the top of the second page:

> Said company shall have three years from the passage of this act within which to file a map of definite location, until which time all their rights originally secured by the filing of the plats of preliminary location shall continue.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Then, in fact, this road has three years during which it can go on without complying with the law, as any other road would have to do?

Mr. POWERS. I do not know how that may be. It has three years in which to complete these working plans.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Now, is not that a distinction, a special privilege that is granted to this road that other roads similarly situated would not have?

Mr. POWERS. I think Congress would grant that to any road in Alaska that came and asked it.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. That is not the question.

Mr. POWERS. There is only one other road in Alaska belonging to American citizens and that is the railroad on the Seward Peninsula, and we have granted them every privilege they asked.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Is it not entirely possible for a company operating in Alaska, whether English or American, to comply with our laws as laid down in the general statutes and get the right of way in the regular way without coming to Congress?

Mr. POWERS. I think in that cold country, when you can not work more than five or six months a year, 300 miles of main line in three years is not unreasonable.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I will ask the gentleman from Maine if it is not true that companies have gone in, and without these special privileges succeeding in getting their rights of way, and are they not going on and building their roads?

Mr. POWERS. There is no other company that has done anything in comparison with what this road has done, except the White Pass and Yukon, which is completed, and which is an English company.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Is this company incorporated?

Mr. POWERS. Certainly, sir.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Under what law?

Mr. POWERS. Under the general law, and has located its route the whole distance, and only asks this extension for filing its completed survey. It has, as I have already stated, completed 40 miles of its line, and has 30 miles more under contract.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. What difference does it make, in the gentleman's mind, whether the White Pass and Yukon road is an English corporation or any other? As a matter of fact, that road has complied with the law, and without special privileges from Congress has gotten right of way.

Mr. POWERS. The White Pass and Yukon is a short road in the American portion of Alaska. It is only partly in our territory. The Canadians have subsidized it and built it, and they have undoubtedly—I know something of what Canada does—received many hundred times the aid this road is asking for here.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. That does not answer the question. That road has complied with our laws and has gotten a regular right of way over our public domain without special privileges from the Government.

Mr. POWERS. It has not built nearly as much road over our domain as this company has now already constructed.

Mr. HAMILTON. There are only 20 miles in American territory.

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman from Michigan informs me there are only 20 miles in American territory, and I have no doubt he is correct. The Canadian Pacific received aid from Canada for building across the State of Maine a large sum per mile, and I have no doubt the White Pass and Yukon was subsidized its own length.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I am simply asking these questions for information.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I hope that this bill will not pass. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. POWERS] says that the committee did not accept all of the advice given to it by the President on the subject of aiding to build railroads. I think it was very wise for them to consider the recommended policy not wise. I think it will be a long time before the American people will be willing to go into Federal-Government-aided railroad building again, after all the rottenness and corruption of the Crédit Mobilier and the De Golyer-Oakes Ames affairs that we got out of the business when we went into it before.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill does several things that I think are entirely too liberal. I notice that when we are dealing with the public money, and especially when we are dealing with it to help corporations, we are awfully liberal. When we are dealing with our own money, or even public money, to help individuals we are not nearly so liberal. A gentleman said to me this morning that we ought to exempt this railroad from taxes because they are unable to borrow money. Why, bless your soul, Mr. Speaker, about fifteen or sixteen years ago, when I was about to the point where I was not able to borrow money very readily, there was nothing said about exempting me from taxation so that I could borrow it. I have never yet been in favor of a proposition exempting anybody from taxation. Every enterprise, whether corporate or individual, ought to stand upon its own bottom with equal burdens of government and with equal opportunities under the Government. There is no more reason under the sun why a lot of men who want to build a railroad in Alaska, or anywhere else, should be exempt from the burdens of government than there is why I should be exempt if I wanted to plant cotton, or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] be exempt if he wanted to practice law, or somebody else because he wanted to manufacture cotton.

I am opposed to exemption from taxes. The gentleman from Maine says that this bill only exempts this company "from the license tax." That is true. But the general law already exempts them from every other tax. They are exempt now from ad valorem taxes on property, and the general law provides that where railroads are to be taxed at all in Alaska it shall be in this manner—by license. When you take that away the result is they are not taxed at all.

Now, one of two things is true. Either it is going to pay somebody to build that railroad, or it is not; and if it is going to pay somebody to build it, then the little amount that they will have to pay for taxes will not render it a non-paying investment. If it is not going to pay, they are not going to build simply because you have exempted them from their share of what little taxes are paid in the Alaskan Territory. The general law is already very liberal. It gives, if I remember right, 20 acres for station and 20 acres for terminals; and there are other advantages under the general Alaskan railroad law. Now, these people, not satisfied with these, ask not only for an exemption for taxes, both property and license, but an increase in the area and value of terminal facilities, an increase in the station rights given under the general law, and various things.

Now, I wish to say here and now that I was informed by an ex-member of this House, in whom I place very much confidence personally and in every other way, that there was a company there now building a railroad chartered under the laws of the State of Washington, and that they had spent, he said—I am not certain about the amount, but, I think, something like a million and a half of dollars.

Mr. HAMILTON. What road is that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not remember the name of the road.

Mr. HAMILTON. It would be well for the gentleman to be specific, because there are other projects.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can not be specific when I can not remember.

Mr. LLOYD. The road to which you refer is not this road, but it is a road that is to be built.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Shafroth, who was a Member of this House, was speaking to me this morning about a company which was chartered, as he said, by the State of Washington, without any of these special privileges.

Mr. HAMILTON. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON. What road does Mr. Shafroth represent?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That I do not know. I have already told the gentleman that.

Mr. HAMILTON. Will the gentleman permit me to say to him that Mr. Shafroth represents the White Pass and Yukon Company, or people who are connected with an English company, and who are endeavoring to prevent American capital constructing railroads on Alaskan soil.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know the man, a man of honor—I don't care who is his client—and I know that when the man makes a statement of fact, it is the truth.

Mr. HAMILTON. Nobody would deny the statement; but the facts are as I state.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is not a man who ever served with him does not know his honesty and truthfulness.

Mr. LLOYD. I am sure the gentleman from Mississippi wants to state the thing fairly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course.

Mr. LLOYD. I have conversed with Mr. Shafroth in connection with the railroad legislation that is proposed in Alaska, and there is something coming up that is much worse than this.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is there a worse bill than this to come up?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes; ten times worse.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then let us beat this one first—it is bad enough—and beat the one that is ten times worse than this, when it comes up later, ten times as badly. Whether he was complaining to me about this road or the one to follow, which is worse, I do not know; but these gentlemen in urging this bill are seeking to have themselves exempt from taxation. There is no more reason why the railroads in Alaska should be exempt than anybody should be, and they are seeking other special advantages in addition to those they have received under the already very liberal general railroad laws for the Territory of Alaska.

I do not suppose there is a man in the House who will deny the statement that there is no more liberal law relating to railroads than is the general law for the construction of railways in the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is not such a liberal law—and it is liberal in some of its provisions—as to enable the people to construct railroads to satisfactorily take care of the traffic of that country. The people in Alaska are in a very bad way for transportation facilities. Now, so far as I am concerned, I want to help them out in every way I can.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, with reference to that, of course the people in Alaska are having difficulties, in a scantily settled and poor country, about enterprises in building railroads.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Not a poor country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It may not be poor in potentiality, but it is in actuality, because there are few people there to work and make money, and wealth is the result of labor profitably employed.

Mr. HAMILTON. They are at work there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But there are not many of them.

Mr. HAMILTON. Does the gentleman know that it costs $100 per ton to get freight by water into Alaska now?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know if it costs $100 a ton to get freight by water it will cost more than $100 a ton to get it there by rail.

Mr. HAMILTON. What makes the gentleman say that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know whether it costs $100 a ton, but if the gentleman from Michigan says it does I accept the statement. The gentleman from Washington has mentioned the fact that gentlemen are having difficulty in building the road. Of course every sparsely settled country has difficulty in building railroads, and it is natural that it should have difficulty in building railroads; but in the course of time, when conditions shall justify the railroads, they will be built.

Now, it was argued that the Government ought to build a railroad wherever the people needed that one should be built. In other words, the people who live in a portion of the country where railroads are just as much needed, but where agriculture, commerce, and mining justify them in paying out their own earnings for railroads are to be taxed in order to build a railroad somewhere where commerce, agriculture, and mining do not justify it, because if it did it would be built.

Mr. HAMILTON. Is the country in any way taxed by enacting the provisions of this bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, for every dollar they do not collect up there we have got to make it up—somebody in Alaska or somewhere in the balance of the United States has got to make it up.

Mr. HAMILTON. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There never was a man exempted from taxation but that some other man had to make it up, unless you are running a government where you are collecting more taxes than you need; and I hope that is not the case in Alaska, and I hope it is not the case here. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and I will yield any of it to any gentleman on this side who may need it.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, how much time has the gentleman remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi has eight minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Maine nine minutes.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman from Mississippi use the balance of his time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. POWERS. I intend to use the remainder of mine or give it away.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman close in one speech?

Mr. POWERS. One speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will not use any further time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I want this House distinctly to understand that to-day in Alaska for more than one-half of the year, when the Yukon River is frozen over, there is one of the greatest and most exacting monopolies doing transportation business found on this continent—the White Pass-Yukon Company, whose attorney is Mr. Shafroth, who has interviewed the gentleman from Mississippi. It has no competitor, and it does not mean to have any. I am surprised that the leader of the Democratic party, that claims to be against all monopolies, should come here and oppose a road which, if built, furnishes another source of transportation from the ocean to the Yukon River in opposition to this White Pass and Yukon road, and an English road at that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I don't care whether it is English or Dutch. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine a question. Does the gentleman think that the right way to avoid a monopoly, even granting that there were one or will be one, is to tax me to avoid it for somebody else's benefit?

Mr. POWERS. I will answer the gentleman by saying that there is no property to be taxed there until we bring it into existence. They are not now operating the 40 miles of railroad for public purposes simply because they do not want to pay the tax. The object of building the 463-mile line, to say nothing about its branches, is to open up a desirable country which will give us the privilege of transporting supplies to the Yukon River where navigation is open, and the river does not freeze for two months longer than down below toward the mouth, and to enable our people who are trying to mine in that section of the country to get freight at a rate so that they can live, so that mining operations can be carried on in many claims that will not pay now, freights are so high. We will develop that country and open up its vast wealth of coal, copper, and timber, I trust, in the not too far distant future.

Mr. LLOYD rose.

Mr. POWERS. I can not yield to the gentleman. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; I waived my time in order that you might conclude.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that gentlemen ought not to oppose this petty little aid. The relieving from taxation of this road, while it is creating the property to be taxed, which is so necessary to our own people, so necessary in order that the miners on the Yukon and in all northern Alaska may not be, for more than half the year, in the grip of this English corporation, whose attorneys have not appeared before our committee, but we have heard from them in many ways, and they have not failed to make themselves distinctly understood. This road is not within hundreds of miles of the one which they pretend to have surveyed, but which they have not surveyed. Now, Mr. Speaker, under these circumstances, I submit that if Congress wishes to do anything for the development of Alaska this session, it should pass this bill as a very easy and proper means of doing it with little or no cost to the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the gentleman a question right there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. POWERS. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman has referred to Government aid in building railroads in the Philippines and to building roads in Alaska as if they both were justifiable enterprises. That is a question on which he and I differ, as I do not think either one is justifiable; but the question I want to ask him is, Does he not think if the Government was going to aid the building of a road, it would do more good by aiding the building of a road in Texas or some other State of this Union, where there would be more use of and for one, where it would serve more people, than by aiding a road up in Alaska?

Mr. POWERS. I think there is no place on this continent where it would do more good than right where this bill proposes it shall be done.

Mr. LLOYD. I am sure the gentleman from Maine has no purpose of deceiving the House.

Mr. POWERS. Certainly not.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Shafroth, to whom the gentleman has referred, represents a State of Washington company. He does not represent the White Pass and Yukon Company.

Mr. POWERS. One moment. I can not be interrupted any more. I understand whom Mr. Shafroth represents, and I understand the men who are behind that project, but the gentleman will agree with me that the project to which he refers has no connection with this. It has connection with another and a different one.

Mr. LLOYD. I want to say also that Mr. Shafroth is not opposing this particular bill.

Mr. POWERS. Is it not a right and proper and reasonable thing to extend this time, and to exempt this road from this small amount of taxation if it will go on and complete its road so that it can pay taxes in the future? It does not exist now. Nobody pays any taxes there now that I know of. Is it not a good business proposition? Is it not in accordance with the recommendation of the President in his message? In heaven's name, suppose we had denied some little aid like this instead of aiding the great roads that cross the continent to the Pacific coast, we would have set back the wheels of progress a half century. And we have got every dollar of money back that we ever expended on those roads. Every bond that the United States issued or guaranteed in their behalf has been paid by them.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the aid asked for in this bill, the exemption from license tax or taxation during the time the road is being built, the small addition to terminal facilities, and the extension of time within which to file final location and working plans, on a road nearly 500 miles long—these requests are reasonable and just, and I hope this House will grant them. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 129, noes 53.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, if I caught the figures correctly, there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in the interim, I call for the yeas and nays upon the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The point is made that no quorum is present. The doors will be closed, the Sergeant-at-Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 110, nays 60, answered "present" 29, not voting 182, as follows:

So the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

For the session:

Mr. BRADLEY with Mr. GOULDEN.

Until further notice:

Mr. DOVENER with Mr. SPARKMAN.

For the balance of the day:

Mr. STERLING with Mr. STANLEY.

Mr. LITTAUER with Mr. LEWIS.

Mr. LONGWORTH with Mr. LAMAR.

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. COCKRAN.

Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. VREELAND with Mr. LESTER.

Mr. OLMSTED with Mr. TALBOTT.

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. MOON of Tennessee.

Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. CLARK of Florida.

For the vote:

Mr. BURTON of Delaware with Mr. BOWERS.

Mr. COUSINS with Mr. FRENCH.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. In the affirmative.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I am paired for the day with Mr. FLOOD, of Virginia, and I desire to change my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas and he answered "present."

Mr. DALE. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOWIE]. I desire to change my vote from "aye" to "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. DALE and he answered "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

CARRYING OF DANGEROUS ARTICLES ON PASSENGER STEAMERS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 6129) to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the carrying of dangerous articles on passenger steamers.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4472 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following provision: "Provided, however, That nothing in the provisions of this title shall prohibit the transportation by vessels not carrying passengers for hire of gasoline or any of the products of petroleum for use as a source of motive power for the motor boats or launches of such vessels."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

A second not being demanded, the question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

TO PROHIBIT SHANGHAIING IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 19374) to prohibit shanghailing in the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever, with intent that any person shall perform service or labor of any kind on board of any vessel of any kind engaged in trade and commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, shall—

First. Procure or induce or attempt to procure or induce another by force, threats, or representations which the person making them knows or believes to be untrue, or while the person so induced or procured is intoxicated or under the influence of any drug, to go on board of any such vessel.

Second. Induce or procure or attempt to induce or procure another by force or threats, or by representations known or believed by the person making them to be untrue, or while the person so induced or procured is intoxicated or under the influence of any drug, to sign or in any wise enter into any agreement to go on board any such vessel to perform service or labor thereon, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for one year, or both.

SEC. 2. That whoever shall knowingly detain on board any such vessel any person induced to go on board thereof or to enter into an agreement to go on board thereof by any of the means defined in section 1 hereof shall be punished as provided in section 1.

SEC. 3. That whoever shall knowingly aid or abet in the doing of any of the things declared unlawful by sections 1 and 2 of this act shall be deemed a principal and punished accordingly.

SEC. 4. That sections 4, 6, and 24 of chapter 28 of the acts of Congress, approved December 21, 1898, shall apply to all vessels engaged in the taking of oysters, anything in section 26 of said last-mentioned act to the contrary notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

A second not being demanded, the question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

BRASS CANNON FOR GENERAL HOWELL POST, NO. 31, GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC, OF WOODBURY, N. J.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended and House joint resolution No. 98 be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish brass cannon to the General Howell Post, No. 31, Grand Army of the Republic, of Woodbury, N. J.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to deliver to the General Howell Post, No. 31, Grand Army of the Republic, of Woodbury, N. J., if the same can be done without detriment to the public service, two brass cannon, now at the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., one marked "179, Revere Copper Company," 12-pounder, weight 1,246 pounds, 1862 model, T. J. R. brass gun, and the other marked "226, H. N. H. & Co.," 12-pounder, weight 1,235 pounds, model 1863, T. J. R. brass gun, the same to be used in front of the monument erected on the court-house grounds at Woodbury, N. J.: Provided, That the donation shall be without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

A second not being demanded, the question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the joint resolution was passed.

DAM ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER NEAR BEMIDJI, MINN.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended and the bill (H. R. 18026) permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River near the city of Bemidji, Beltrami County, Minn., be passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, it is twenty-four minutes after 5 o'clock, and I think the gentleman from New York wants to move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The bill, the Chair understands, is a short one.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it a very short one?

The SPEAKER. And the Chair indicated to the gentleman from Minnesota that he would be recognized. It is a dam bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to William R. Morrison and H. W. Haines to build a dam across the Mississippi River near the city of Bemidji, Minn., between the point where the same crosses the west line of township 145, range 35, and the point where said river crosses the north line of said township in Hubbard County, Minn., for the development of water power and such works and structures in connection therewith as may be necessary or convenient in the development of said power and in the utilization of the power thereby developed: Provided, That the plans for the construction of said dam and appurtenant works shall be submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War before the commencement of the construction of the same: And provided further, That the said William R. Morrison and H. W. Haines, their heirs, administrators, and assigns, shall not deviate from such plans after such approval, either before or after the completion of said structure, unless the modification of said plans shall have previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That there shall be placed and maintained in connection with said dam a sluiceway, so arranged as to permit logs, timber, and lumber to pass around, through, or over said dam without unreasonable delay or hindrance and without toll or charges: And provided further, That the dam shall be so constructed that the Government of the United States may at any time construct in connection therewith a suitable lock for navigation purposes, and may at any time, without compensation, control the said dam so far as shall be necessary for purposes of navigation, but shall not destroy the water power developed by said dam and structures to any greater extent than may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation; and that the Secretary of War may at any time require and enforce, at the expense of the owners, such modifications and changes in the construction of such a dam as he may deem advisable in the interests of navigation: And provided further, That suitable fishways and lights, to be approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, shall be constructed and maintained at said dam by William R. Morrison and H. W. Haines, their heirs, administrators, and assigns.

SEC. 2. That in case any litigation arises from the building of said dam or from the obstruction of said river by said dam or appurtenant works, cases may be tried in the proper courts as now provided for that purpose in the State of Minnesota and in the courts of the United States: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers or to exempt said structures from the operation of the same.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be null and void unless the dam herein authorized be commenced within one year and be completed within three years from the time of the passage of this act.

SEC. 4. That the right to amend or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

A second not being demanded, the question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. GUDGER asked leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of F. M. Rhineheardt et al., Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. GARNER asked leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Floyd L. Frisbie, Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the requests be granted.

SENATOR FROM KANSAS.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I offer the following resolve. I had intended to ask the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to present the resolve. As he is not here, I send it now to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and are hereby, directed to examine into the legal effect of the late decision of the Supreme Court in the case of JOSEPH R. BURTON, a Senator from the State of Kansas, and, as soon as may be, to report their recommendation as to what action, if any, shall be taken by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine desire the present consideration of the resolution just read?

Mr. HALE. It is simply directing the committee to investigate. There is no objection, I suppose, to the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

FALSELY STAMPED JEWELRY, ETC.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14604) forbidding the importation, exportation, or carriage in interstate commerce of falsely or spuriously stamped articles of merchandise made of gold or silver or their alloys, and for other purposes. It is a bill which was unanimously reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated in their order.

Mr. KEAN. There is an amendment on page 6, line 18, which is not marked in the bill, but which should be made. After the word "into," in that line, I move to insert "or exported from."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. The first amendment which appears in the print is at the bottom of page 7.

The SECRETARY. In section 5, on page 7, line 24, strike out the words "one thousand" and insert the words "five hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In line 25, before the word "months," strike out "six" and insert "three."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In section 8, on page 8, line 21, strike out the words "six months" and insert the words "one year," so as to make the section read:

That this act shall take effect one year after the date of its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

YOSEMITE VALLEY GRANT AND MARIPOSA BIG TREE GROVE.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 118) accepting the recession by the State of California of the Yosemite Valley grant and the Mariposa Big Tree Grove, and including the same, together with fractional sections 5 and 6, township 5 south, range 22 east, Mount Diablo meridian, California, within the metes and bounds of the Yosemite National Park, and changing the boundaries thereof.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. KEAN. Personally I have no objection to the measure, but the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] said he would like to be present when it is considered.

Mr. PERKINS. Very well; I will not press it at this time.

CEMETERY LANDS AT TINCUP, COLO.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1476) granting certain lands to the town of Tincup, Colo., for cemetery purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a patent to be issued to the town of Tincup, Colo., from and out of the Leadville Forest Reserve, for the west half of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 7, township 15 south, range 81 west of sixth principal meridian, for cemetery purposes, such patent to issue only after the filing of due proof with the Land Department of the incorporation of said town; and said patent to contain a clause that in case the land, or any portion thereof, shall be devoted to other than cemetery uses, the land shall thereupon revert to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18537) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, to report it with amendments and to submit a report thereon. I give notice that I will call it up at the earliest practicable moment, I hope tomorrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 4403, the immigration bill, so called.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 4403) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with amendments.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire only to ascertain how the Senator from Vermont desires to proceed. I wish to present some remarks on the bill generally. If it is his purpose to have it read now for discussion of the amendments, I should like to make a few remarks on the bill generally.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It has been suggested by some gentlemen around me that perhaps before any of the amendments are considered it would be well for me to make a statement of the bill.

Mr. McCREARY. That will be agreeable to me, and then I will follow the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will ask that the formal reading be dispensed with and that the Senate act upon the amendments as they are reached, if that be the pleasure of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I yield to the Senator.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I rise to a matter of personal privilege. My attention has just been called to an article in the New York Tribune of May 22. The article is headed:

"JOKER" IN RATE BILL?—M'CUMBER'S AMENDMENT—SEEMS TO ENABLE CARRIERS TO DISREGARD COMMISSION'S ORDERS.

The article goes on to state that—

Leading lawyers in Congress are of the opinion that a tiny amendment put in the railroad rate bill by Senator McCUMBER, of North Dakota, constitutes a "little joker" which vitiates the effectiveness of the measure. Senator McCUMBER admits that his amendment will prevent an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission going into effect until the court has determined whether or not such order is "just and reasonable" and a final decree has been issued by the court, whenever a carrier chooses to disregard such order.

Mr. President, I have never admitted anything of that character. I do not admit that this amendment will in the slightest degree affect the time the order will go into effect. This article goes on further to state:

Mr. McCUMBER explains that his purpose in offering the amendment was to insure the court review, in the case of a carrier refusing to comply with an order of the Commission, being as broad as that provided for in the Allison amendment, where the carrier may appeal to the court against an order of the Commission. Under the McCumber amendment the carrier who objected to complying with an order of the Commission would have no occasion to appeal to the courts for relief. He would need merely to refuse to carry out the order, and no one could compel him to do so until the Commission, on which would be the burden of proof, had demonstrated to the satisfaction of the court that its order was not only regular, but "just and reasonable."

Mr. President, this is also very incorrect. The purpose in offering the amendment was not to insure the court review, because the court review had already been insured by the Allison amendment, but was simply to insure harmony between the sections of the bill.

Mr. President, after the Allison amendment was adopted by the Senate it left the bill providing two separate methods of getting into court and two separate kinds of review. Under one provision (page 26 of the bill), if the carrier failed to comply with the order the Commission, by petition, brought the case into court. Upon the hearing of such case, if it appeared "that the order was regularly made and duly served," and that the carrier was in disobedience, the court would issue its mandatory process to compel obedience. In this case there would be no trial upon its merits—simply the question as to whether the order was regularly made and served.

On the next page of the bill the Allison amendment provides for a trial on the merits. It is apparent, therefore, that the two trials, while they are between the same parties upon the same subject-matter, were absolutely inconsistent with each other. And the object of striking out the word "regularly" was simply to harmonize the two provisions. Their inconsistency will be seen by a single illustration:

Suppose upon the trial under the first provision the court determines that the order was regularly made and issues its mandatory process compelling obedience. This would be a final judgment in that case. At the same time an action is instituted by the common carrier under the other provision, and a preliminary injunction is issued against the order, or upon final determination a perpetual injunction is issued. There you would have two processes from the same court upon a case between the same parties and upon the same subject-matter, one process compelling the common carrier to obey the order and the other process forbidding the Commission to enforce the order. It is perfectly safe to say that neither House ever contemplated such inconsistency.

This amendment does not affect the date at which an order shall go into effect in the slightest degree. It does not abate the time in which it shall go into effect. The bill provides (page 20), "All orders of the Commission, except orders for the payment of money, shall take effect within such reasonable time, not less than thirty days, and shall continue in force for such period of time, not exceeding two years, as shall be prescribed in the order of the Commission, unless the same shall be suspended or modified or set aside by the Commission or be suspended or set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction."

How any person with the slightest amount of reasoning power could possibly claim that by changing the word "regularly" to "lawfully," which merely changes the scope of the inquiry to harmonize with the inquiry in a proceeding brought by the common carrier itself, would operate to extend the period of time within which the order would go into effect is beyond my comprehension. It does not affect the order in the slightest degree.

The Commission, if the order is disobeyed, can, the very next day after the order goes into effect, bring the matter into court, and then, whether it is brought into court by the Commission or whether it is brought into court by the carrier itself, the trial and the determination will be exactly the same under the two provisions.

Neither provision pretends in any way to affect the time in which the order shall go into effect. Of course, any man who knows anything about the law would understand that the order of the Commission is not self-enforcing; that it would require an order of the court in any instance to compel the common carrier to obey the order. If such carrier does not obey the order of the court of course it is subject to the penalties which are prescribed in the act itself. Therefore I say it seems to me absolutely incomprehensible how anyone, even not an attorney, could make such a ridiculous claim as is made in this article that the change of the word "regularly" to "lawfully" would affect the order and the date on which the order would go into effect.

There is another provision in this article to which I call attention. It also provides that—

The amendment, which in the opinion of leading lawyers in both Houses constitutes so great a menace to the efficacy of the bill, merely provided for striking out the word "regularly" and inserting the word "lawfully" in section 5 of the act.

Now, Mr. President, it is stated in this article that this amendment was a "joker." The only joke that I can possibly see is the joke in the article itself, if the ridiculousness of an article may be termed to be a joke. It is rather a slur, not only upon the committee who agreed to this amendment without a dissenting voice, but also upon the great number of good lawyers in the Senate to consider that either the committee or the attorneys would have allowed the efficacy of the bill to be joked out of existence.

Mr. President, that is all the explanation it seems to me that is necessary. I have tried to make it clear and to the point. I regret that any reporter should have understood or stated that I had ever admitted that the amendment in the slightest degree tended to extend the time in which an order could go into effect. The bill itself clearly provides when the order is to go into effect and continue in effect, and nothing can arrest its force except an order of the court or a subsequent order of the Commission.

CONTRIBUTIONS IN CONNECTION WITH POLITICAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. FORAKER. The bill the Senator from Vermont called up will be likely to occupy some time, and there is a very short bill that will have no opposition, I am sure, which I should like to ask to have passed, if the Senator will yield to me for a minute. If there is any opposition to it, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have no objection, if it is a matter which will not cause delay.

Mr. FORAKER. If there is any delay, I will withdraw it. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4563) to prohibit corporations from making money contributions in connection with political elections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections with amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The amendments will be stated.

The amendments of the Committee on Privileges and Elections were, in line 3, after the word "bank," to strike out "or any corporation engaged in interstate or foreign commerce;" in line 9, after the word "which," to insert "Presidential and Vice-Presidential electors or;" in line 11, after the word "or," to strike out "with;" in the same line, after the word "election," to strike out "or attempted election" and insert "by any State legislature;" on page 2, line 3, after the word "officer," to strike out "stockholder" and insert "or;" and in line 4, before the word "of," to strike out "or employees;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any laws of Congress, to make a money contribution in connection with any election to any political office. It shall also be unlawful for any corporation whatever to make a money contribution in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice-Presidential electors or a Representative in Congress is to be voted for or any election by any State legislature of a United States Senator. Every corporation which shall make any contribution in violation of the foregoing provisions shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $5,000, and every officer or director of any corporation who shall consent to any contribution by the corporation in violation of the foregoing provisions shall be subject to a fine of not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like to have some member of the committee state to the Senate why the words read have been stricken out from the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Secretary will read the report, I think it will give the Senator all the information necessary.

Mr. PATTERSON. It seems to me that the parts stricken out are the most important parts of the bill, and it is far more important to prohibit——

Mr. FORAKER. I asked for the consideration of the bill at this time under the impression that it would not lead to any debate at all, saying to the Senator from Vermont that if it did I would withdraw my request. He now reminds me of my promise.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think it is due to the country that there should be an explanation made.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; I will withhold the bill until after the Senator from Vermont is through with his measure, and then I will take pleasure in making some explanation of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4403) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, in presenting this bill, which is in amendment of the present immigration laws, an effort has been made to strengthen those statutes and to make them more effective. The Senate will remember that the act of 1903 was not only a very comprehensive measure, but that it was based upon the principle that we should cause a most thorough examination to be made of all aliens seeking to become residents of the United States, and that every objectionable character, whether the objection arose from mental or moral or physical causes, should be excluded.

Before taking up the amendments for discussion, I wish to say that the public sentiment of the country has become very much aroused by the vast number of aliens who have sought entrance into the United States since 1898. This may well be so, because in that year the number coming was only 229,299, while in 1905 it had increased to 1,026,000. The tide of immigration reached its highest mark in that year.

Owing to this great influx of aliens a belief has become general that the European nations are using the United States as a dumping ground for their diseased and their insane and their criminal classes. To some extent this may be true, but not at all to the extent, in my judgment, that is believed by the general public. In order that there may be a better understanding of the causes which control the flow of immigration to the United States and of the character and condition of aliens recently admitted, I wish to submit some facts gathered from official sources which may serve to dispel misapprehension and allay fears.

THE LAW OF SUPPLY AND DEMAND CONTROLS THE VOLUME OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. President, I think that the law of supply and demand as applied to labor very largely governs the number of aliens who seek our shores. This is indicated by the movement of the alien classes during periods of depression and of prosperity in the United States. Going back a half century, we find that during the period of depression between 1857 and 1860 the number of arrivals decreased from 251,300 in the former year to 153,640 in the latter. Again, following the depression of 1873, the number decreased from 459,803 in that year to 138,469 in 1878. I find also that the number coming in 1892 was 623,084, while in 1898, after that period of depression, it was only 229,299.

On the other hand, when times are prosperous in this country, when there is an active demand for labor, we have a corresponding increase in the number of aliens coming to our shores. As I have already stated, in 1898 the number admitted was 229,299, while in 1905 it had reached the unprecedented total of 1,026,499.

Returning to a previous period of prosperity, we find the same effect. In 1878 we received only 138,469, but in 1882 we received 788,992. So it will be seen that the workingman of Europe seems to understand perfectly what is going on in the United States. The great body of aliens who have found homes in the United States are in correspondence with their friends in Europe; with seven steamship lines connecting New York with all the different ports of Europe, the mail facilities are such that the laboring classes in all of the European countries are in quick touch with the laboring classes in the United States; and whenever a period of prosperity prevails, and the demand for labor is great and wages are good, the fact is heralded abroad and the tide of immigration runs high.

IMMIGRANTS COME UPON THEIR OWN INITIATIVE AND WITH A DEFINITE PURPOSE.

As I have said, the law of 1903 was intended as a selective rather than a restrictive measure, and, while the number of incoming aliens has reached high-water mark since its enactment, I believe the selective features have admirably served their purpose, and that the aliens who have been admitted under it were by no means "dumped" upon our shores, but rather that they came with a definite purpose in view, knowing where they were going, what they were going to do, and what wages they would receive.

In the year 1905 we admitted through the Ellis Island station 754,334 immigrants. Seven hundred and fifty-one thousand five hundred and ten, or 97.5 per cent of the whole number, had definite addresses and knew precisely where they were going. Out of that vast number only 2,824 were without a definite purpose in this regard. This is a most significant fact, and one that should have a strong influence upon us as we weigh the causes which operate in bringing this vast wave of immigration to our shores.

When at Ellis Island some months ago, I found that a railroad ticket office was maintained for the convenience of those destined to inland points. The gentleman in charge estimated that 65 per cent of the whole number admitted through that station were already provided either with railroad tickets or with orders for railroad transportation. These facts are especially significant when it is remembered that during the whole period since 1898 wages have been maintained, not only at the rate they had then reached, but even higher. Published tables from the Bureau of Labor show that the wages of blacksmiths, bricklayers, carpenters, compositors, hod carriers, general laborers, machinists, house painters, plumbers, stonecutters, stone masons, iron molders, and boiler makers have increased over 20 per cent during that time, and I suppose a corresponding increase has come in connection with other branches of labor.

THE RESULTS OF A WISE SELECTIVE SYSTEM.

To my mind, an encouraging feature of the present immigration to the United States is that the great majority of those admitted are in the very prime of life, and all the circumstances surrounding them indicate that they have come upon their own initiative and with an intelligent purpose to improve their condition.

During the last five years we have admitted 3,833,000 aliens at Ellis Island station. Of that multitude, 3,162,000, or 82½ per cent of the whole, have been between the ages of 14 and 44—just in the period of life when they are in possession of their best earning capacity, when health and vigor abound, when they are least liable to become paupers or inmates of charitable institutions.

The same facts appear with regard to the single year of 1905 when the number of immigrants admitted to the United States was 1,026,000, and 82 per cent of that vast number were between the ages of 14 and 44. There were only 12½ per cent under 14 and only 6 per cent over 45 years of age. It seems to me that these figures illustrate the potency of the present law in protecting against defective classes.

Again, take the very last month, April of the present year. The number admitted through Ellis Island was 118,665. Those between the ages of 14 and 44 were 104,318, or 87¾ per cent of the whole; those under 14 were 9½ per cent, and those over 45 years of age constituted only 3¼ per cent. These were destined to every State and Teritory of the United States; but, of course, more to New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Illinois, and the manufacturing States than to the others.

REASSURING FACTS.

Then the perhaps natural fear that the relative proportion of foreign born to all residents of the United States is increasing seems not to be substantiated by the census reports for the forty years ending in 1900, for I find that this foreign-born element constituted 15.4 of the whole in 1860, 14.44 in 1870, 13.32 in 1880, 14.77 in 1890, and 13.6 in 1900.

There is another fact connected with the question of the increase of alien population which is sometimes overlooked and which ought to be mentioned. I refer to the number of immigrants admitted who subsequently return to Europe. During the five years from 1899 to 1905, inclusive, those arriving in steerage from British, Continental, and the Mediterranean ports numbered 4,210,292; but during that same period there returned to the old countries as steerage passengers 1,275,803, or 31 per cent of the whole. So that, out of all coming by steerage to the United States during that time, 4,210,292, the net gain in population has been probably about 2,934,000, or 69 per cent of those originally admitted.

Another most interesting fact bearing upon one phase of this question is this: That in 1904 we received through the steerage from the Mediterranean ports 142,913, and we sent back to the Mediterranean ports 149,878, or 6,965 more than came here during that year. That is explained in part by the fact that very many of the Italian immigrants who come to this country work through the warm season, return to Italy in the fall, and spend the winter at home engaged in their small trades.

Another thing which has impressed me as bearing upon the condition of immigrants is a statement made in the report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, which has also been cited by him in some of his public addresses, to the effect that this million of immigrants, in round numbers, who came to us in 1905, brought with them $25,000,000; that is to say, they brought $25 per capita, and he cites the fact that the world's money is but $10 per capita, while the money per capita in circulation in the United States is $31, or perhaps a fraction more than that.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that these facts, and the fact I have already mentioned that 82 per cent of all who have come to us in the last five or six years are between the ages of 14 and 44, should relieve our anxiety as to the class of immigrants we are admitting and should emphasize the fact that the present law is highly effective in its operation.

But there is still another encouraging feature, and that relates to the 12 per cent of the whole, who are under 14 years of age. The school census of 1900 indicates that of the children of natives—that is, the native white children of native parents—68.7 per cent of the boys and 71.4 per cent of the girls were in school six months in the year; of the native white children of foreign-born parents 88.7 per cent of the boys and 90.6 per cent of the girls were in school; and of the children who were born abroad 89.1 per cent of the boys and 90.8 per cent of the girls were in school for six months of that year. It clearly appears from these figures that a larger percentage of the children of foreign-born parents and children born abroad were in school for six months in the year 1900 than there were of native-born children of native parents.

THE MOST OBJECTIONABLE CLASS.

This leads us to the proposition that the remaining 6 per cent of those admitted, who are over 45 years of age, constitute, in all probability, the class from which we may reasonably expect our greatest danger. It stands to reason that it should be so.

The Commissioner-General, in his report for 1905, gives the number of those who were born abroad who are inmates of insane, charitable, and penal institutions of the United States. I have the table before me, but will not take the time to read.

It appears, however, that 10 per cent of such inmates have been in this country over forty years; 22 per cent over thirty-one years; 38 per cent have been here over twenty-one years; 66 per cent over eleven years, and 79 per cent have been here over six years. This record can not possibly be construed as a reflection upon the present law, because none of these aliens were admitted under its provisions. It does, however, point to the need of looking sharply after those whose age or whose mental, moral, or physical condition suggests even the possibility of their ultimately becoming members of these undesirable classes, and this bill is calculated to strengthen the law in this regard.

THE PRINCIPLE UNDERLYING IMMIGRATION LEGISLATION.

As I have already said, the present law is good. It was the result of a great deal of study, of investigation, and of experience, and it came after many conflicts with adverse interests. I look upon that piece of legislation as being pretty nearly a masterpiece when we consider the problem with which it deals. The statute was based upon the principle of selection, and from beginning to end its provisions are aimed at the defective classes. It contains no prohibition against the admission of any class of persons who would make desirable citizens.

There are in this country two classes of persons who differ in judgment as to the policy to be adopted to control immigration. One class is made up of pronounced restrictionists who favor drastic measures for the reduction of the number admitted. The other class think that the demand for labor should govern the number admitted, but that we should select from those offering themselves, and permit only those to enter who are sound in mind, sound in body, sound in morals, and fit to become fathers and mothers of American children. The present law was based upon this latter principle—the principle of selection—and the amendments proposed in this bill were framed in accordance with this principle.

The present law, I am glad to say in passing, has been very ably administered. I have taken great pains to observe its operation, and frequent visits to Ellis Island have convinced me that our officers are thorough, efficient, and at the same time fair and just in the discharge of their duties.

INSPECTION AT THE PORTS OF EMBARKATION.

Before the adoption of the present law the great transportation companies—and I do not stand here to rail against them, for naturally they look at the question of transportation from a selfish standpoint—brought to our shores all kinds of objectionable people. But under the provisions of this law a restraint was placed upon them and the results are most gratifying.

Senators are probably aware that the Commissioner-General of Immigration has repeatedly recommended that we station officers of the Marine-Hospital Service at the foreign ports, that an examination of aliens intending to come to America might be made at the port of embarkation. It is an exceedingly good idea, and I wish that it might be carried out. With this end in view inquiries have been made of foreign governments whether or not such an arrangement would be agreeable to them. Replies have been received, from which it appears that the United Kingdom would permit it; Italy would and does permit it, and we now have officers stationed in that country, and every immigrant who sails from Italian ports is examined by a surgeon of our own service. I may say also that Japan consented to such an arrangement, and we have officers stationed there; but in the Netherlands, in China, in Greece, permission was refused, and from Germany, France, Norway, Sweden, and Belgium no replies have been received. Under these circumstances it has not been possible for our Government to establish a system of its own for the examination of immigrants at ports of embarkation, except as already indicated.

But to accomplish the same purpose, Mr. President, to secure an examination of intending immigrants before their embarkation, a provision was adopted in the law of 1903 by which a fine of $100 is imposed on transportation companies for every person brought into the United States afflicted with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease which might have been discovered by a competent medical examination on the other side. At the places where we have been unable to send our own officers to make such examinations, this provision of the law has induced the steamship companies to adopt a like precaution rather than submit to the inevitable fine. These companies, it appears, did not fully appreciate the force of this provision at first, but the imposition of fines amounting to $28,400 in 1904, and to $27,300 in 1905, has not been without effect and the various ocean lines have now undertaken to make the examinations by their own surgeons at ports of embarkation more thorough and effective. A gratifying result of this response to the demands of the law is illustrated by the fact that during the single period of six months, extending from July 1, 1905, to January, 1906, there were excluded by the steamship companies at ports of embarkation 5,070 persons who were afflicted with contagious or loathsome diseases.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. LATIMER. The Senator from Vermont is on a very interesting part of this discussion. It seems that one of the difficulties in connection with the country being overrun with immigrants who are not desirable is that the steamship companies have taken so much interest in the matter that they have agents throughout Europe to canvass the different countries in order to get immigrants to come here, so that they may benefit by the transportation charges paid by the immigrants. They have been collecting, in some instances, $150 for each member of a family, and although they may be deported after reaching here and being rejected, and you may collect a fine of $100 from the steamship company for bringing them here in violation of law, still the company makes $50 profit out of the transaction. Now, I want to ask the Senator if he does not think it would be a good idea to put an amendment on this bill to require the steamship companies to pay twice the amount collected from the immigrants when they are rejected because of disease when the diseased condition could have been detected before embarkation for this country? I say where it could have been detected and the immigrants could have been prevented from coming to this country and the steamship companies could have had that knowledge when they brought them to this country, would it not be a good idea to put an amendment on this bill to require the steamship companies to pay an immigrant twice the amount collected from him, so that when deported he would have something with which to take him back to his home, and at the same time be in the nature of a penalty on the steamship company for bringing such people here for profit?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I would do everything possible, Mr. President, to protect the immigrant who has been badly treated by a transportation company, as doubtless very many of them have been; but the operation of the present law has been so good that with the addition of certain provisions in this bill, to which I will refer later, I think we can get along without, perhaps, enacting a measure as drastic as that which has been suggested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER], although I desire to say that I am in perfect sympathy with him in the object which he wishes to accomplish.

Referring again to the effectiveness of medical examinations by steamship companies at foreign ports, I want to say that I was in doubt concerning the real significance of the statement that 5,070 intended immigrants had been turned back at ports of embarkation or at the so-called control stations along the border between Russia and western Europe. It occurred to me that this "turning back" of intended immigrants as reported by the steamship companies to United States officials, was in fact simply a detention of diseased persons that they might be given medical treatment and prepared for a fraudulent entry into the United States at a later date. At my suggestion the list of those 5,070 aliens who were denied the privilege of embarkation was compared with subsequent manifests of incoming aliens with the purpose of ascertaining whether many of them came later, and Commissioner Watchorn gives me the rather surprising information that only 19 names appearing on that list have subsequently appeared on manifests of aliens coming to Ellis Island, and these were mostly marked "temporarily detained for observation."

This satisfies me that the steamship companies are acting in good faith in the work which they are doing.

Without this fine, I doubt if a single one of these persons would have been rejected at the port of embarkation. They would, in all probability, have been brought to our immigrant stations, examined, and deported. I am also informed by Mr. Watchorn that of all the cases certified to be loathsome or dangerous contagious diseases among arrivals at Ellis Island in 1905 only 149 were such as could have been detected at the time of embarkation; that is, out of those whom we deported as so diseased, only 149, in the judgment of the immigration officials, could have been detected had they been examined by our own surgeons on the other side of the water. This, I think, is strong evidence of the effectiveness of the law in compelling steamship companies to cooperate with us in our effort to exclude diseased classes. The provision has really worked a revolution in the method of inspecting aliens abroad.

As evidence that the provision is still working well, I have before me a table showing that 1,373 alien passengers were rejected on account of dangerous contagious or loathsome diseases during the month of March, 1906, by the North German Lloyd Company alone. In a letter transmitting that table to me Commissioner Watchorn says:

> I also inclose a list of rejections by the North German Lloyd Company for the month of March, 1906. A perusal of this list will suffice to indicate the value of section 9 of the act of March 3, 1903. The more thought I give to this matter the more I am convinced that so far as weeding out undesirables is concerned this section furnishes the key to the whole situation. It is sound in principle, possible of execution, and yields satisfactory results.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Where does this process of elimination or rejection by the steamship companies take place, and how does the Senator arrive at his figures showing the number of prospective immigrants the steamship companies have rejected. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am glad to be interrupted. I thought I had a document here explaining that, but I find I have not. I have sent for it. However, I will say to the Senator from Maine that the manifests furnished by the steamship companies show the rejections that have been made at the port of embarkation, and it is from these, I suppose, that the figures have been deduced. In a moment I will have brought to me the Commissioner-General's report for 1905, in which will be found a report from one of the special department inspectors sent abroad by the Bureau of Immigration, who has examined this whole question and tells how the work is done at the different ports of embarkation.

Mr. HALE. I should not suppose the manifests would cover anything except what the steamship company takes on board. I know generally, from my knowledge of the operation of commercial law in relation to vessels, that the manifest runs with the cargo, and I did not suppose any ship would in its manifest cover anything except what was taken aboard the ship. If the Senator is certain about that, of course that is sufficient.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Under existing law the steamship companies are required to furnish at the immigrant stations manifests containing the name, nativity, and various other facts concerning every alien who comes into the United States.

Mr. HALE. Every passenger?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Every alien passenger, and my understanding of the matter is that these manifests include the names of all intended passengers, and that the names of those who are rejected are crossed out and the reason given. I may be in error, but that is my recollection.

Mr. LODGE. As I remember, those who are rejected are included in the manifest.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. If they are, that is different from other matters connected with passengers on vessels ordinarily.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is altogether different and comes under the peculiar provisions of the act of 1903 relating to immigration.

Mr. DRYDEN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Gladly.

Mr. DRYDEN. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont if it is not true that these 5,070 undesirable immigrants were prevented from coming into this country by reason of the law of 1903, whereas under previous laws they probably would not have been detected and prevented from coming here at all?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think that is in part true, and it has prevented the hardship most would have incurred in being brought here only to be rejected and returned.

Mr. DRYDEN. Therefore, as I understand it, the law of 1903 is a humane law, a kind law, in its effect upon the immigrants, because instead of being brought here and detected in America and left here in a friendless condition, to be returned to Europe, they are detected over there near their homes and are returned without any great hardship.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That is the fact; and I want to go further and make the statement that in administering the law at our ports the immigration officers take every precaution to protect the aliens who land. I would be glad if every member of the Senate could visit Ellis Island and witness the operation of the law. Every effort is made to keep immigrants out of the city of New York. Those going west over the Erie road are kept by themselves, placed upon a boat, and landed at the Erie station on the Jersey side. Those going another route are taken to the proper station. Runners do not reach them. I think the whole administration of the immigration act has been upon the most humane basis and with an effort to prevent fraud and deception.

Recurring to the question propounded by the Senator from Maine, I desire to refer to the report of Maurice Fishberg, made to the Commissioner-General of Immigration, dated September 5, 1905. It bears upon the question concerning which he inquires, but I will read only two or three passages, which will perhaps answer the question better than I could do it myself. Speaking of England, he says:

> With the exceptions to be noted hereafter, my observations have shown that every company tries its best to have all emigrants examined by a physician to determine their admissibility to the United States, knowing, as they do, that it is rather expensive to bring a deported immigrant back to England and in addition to pay $100 fine for each case of trachoma.

Again, speaking of English service, he says:

> On embarkation the emigrants are again examined by the steamship doctor and also by a doctor of the board of trade The former, acting for the steamship companies, is usually careless and will pass anybody. The contrary appears to be true of the board of trade physicians.

He adds:

> It is the prevailing conviction of all of the runners in Liverpool and London that the authorities in New York City are too severe, and that it is dangerous to attempt to send diseased aliens to that port. Deportation is very certain.

Then he takes up the work at Antwerp, and says:

> In Antwerp every emigrant is carefully examined by several doctors before he is allowed to embark. There the steamship company has an excellent staff of specialists, who are assisted by a doctor representing the Government emigration service. The examination leaves nothing to be desired.

Regarding a class of immigrants who come from the interior, Inspector Fishberg says:

> The bulk of the eastern European emigrants and a fair proportion of the north and south Europeans pass through Germany while emigrating for the United States. The German steamship companies have taken special sanitary measures in dealing with the emigrants. With the assistance of the police department of the Empire the emigrants are rigidly inspected. This is especially regulated along the frontier of Russia and Austria-Hungary. There have been established so-called "control stations" along the Russian borders.

At these control stations the immigrants are all bathed and their clothing disinfected before they are allowed to leave for German ports.

In describing the work as conducted at Hamburg, in Germany, this official states that immigrants are bathed, their clothing disinfected, that they are taken on board ship without going into the city, and are thoroughly examined by the surgeons.

Then he takes up the work in Italy, where we have our own immigration officers, and says it is ideal. During the last five years they have rejected 27,834. That would be 5,566 annually. He then says:

> After a careful study of the emigration question in eastern and southern Europe I feel called upon to report that the steamship companies can prevent the embarkation of undesirable emigrants for the United States. In fact they are preventing it to a certain extent, and deserve commendation for the good work they are doing. There are, however, a few improvements in this work which I venture to suggest.

AN IMPORTANT ADVANCE PROPOSED.

Mr. President, one of the chief features of this bill is to amend section 9, which provides—

> That it shall be unlawful for any person, including any transportation company other than railway lines entering the United States from foreign contiguous territory, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of any vessel to bring to the United States any aliens afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease.

For doing so a fine of $100 is imposed for each person brought.

Now, by the pending bill it is proposed to amend the section by including in the prohibition "idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, insane persons, epileptics;" so that the section will read:

> SEC. 9. That it shall be unlawful for any person, including any transportation company other than railway lines entering the United States from foreign contiguous territory, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of any vessel to bring to the United States any aliens subject to any of the following disabilities: Idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, insane persons, epileptics, or persons afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease.

In other words, the law provides that steamship companies shall be fined $100 for bringing to this country an alien "afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease," and the proposed amendment to section 9 simply extends this provision to include idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, insane persons, and epileptics, provided their condition might have been ascertained by a competent medical examination at the ports of embarkation.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator, in drawing this very important amendment excluding these different classes, covered, in addition to the language of the old statute, all of the disabilities and infirmities that he believes ought to be incorporated in it so as to make it exhaustive in its terms?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think this clause covers all of the classes whose condition might be detected by a competent medical examination. I have consulted with immigration officials here in Washington and at various immigrant stations, and have secured all the light I can upon that subject, with this result.

Mr. HALE. The Senator believes that if this is adopted and enforced it will practically exhaust the power we should properly exercise with respect to discrimination against these immigrants?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Of that class?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Where a fine should be imposed for bringing them in. This section of the law should not be confounded with those governing the admission or rejection of aliens. It is intended simply to prevent steamship companies from allowing certain classes of intended immigrants to embark from the United States from foreign ports, and this provision in no way conflicts with section 2 or any other section intended to prevent the landing of undesirable aliens in the United States. The section as amended enumerates certain excluded classes whom the committee believe should not be allowed to leave foreign ports upon the hopeless quest of gaining entrance to this country.

Mr. SCOTT. Does that include a maimed or crippled person?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Another provision of the law covers that class, and it has not occurred to me that it was necessary to include disabilities of this nature in this particular provision. The object in levying this fine has been to compel an examination at the ports of embarkation, and so detect diseases of a particularly dangerous or disagreeable character. It provides that a fine shall be imposed in those cases where a competent medical examination would have detected such a disease. Persons of the kind mentioned by the Senator from West Virginia, it seems to me, ought not to come within the class aimed at in this provision of the bill. A person may have lost a finger, but it would be wrong to fine a steamship company $100 for bringing him to one of our ports if he is all right in other respects.

Mr. LATIMER. I have not examined it closely, but I am of the impression that section 9 includes all persons that were prohibited in section 2 of the present law, and that in section 9 as you now have it you have narrowed the limit so that you do not exclude some that were excluded under the present law.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The fine on the steamship company, if the Senator will excuse me, is only imposed when they bring those who are afflicted with loathsome or dangerous contagious diseases. The fine is not imposed upon the steamship company for bringing any except those two classes. The object of this amendment is to also punish the company for bringing insane persons, feeble-minded persons, imbeciles, or epileptics, provided their condition could have been discovered by a proper medical examination. It broadens the provisions of the law of 1903 to that extent.

Mr. PERKINS. If it will not interrupt the Senator from Vermont, I should like to ask a question.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly not.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask one question. Section 2, page 4, line 16, provides that persons shall be excluded who have had two attacks of insanity. Why do you designate two attacks? Insanity, I understand, is hereditary, and if a person has had one attack of insanity, it seems to me it ought to be sufficient to exclude him from coming into this country. Such a person is certainly not a desirable immigrant; and the statistics show that in the State of California, which I have the honor in part to represent, over 65 per cent of those in the insane asylums are of foreign birth. It strikes me very forcibly that we ought not to permit anyone to enter this country who has the misfortune to have insanity in the family.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The question of revising the present law with regard to the exclusion of insane persons has not entered into the discussion of this bill in committee, nor has the necessity for a change been suggested to me. I will, however, if the Senator please, be glad to take that matter up before consideration of the bill is completed.

This effort to induce steamship companies to prevent the embarkation from foreign ports of aliens who are sure to be denied admission to the United States under the law is to my mind a most important and commendable one. It is but simple justice to those who are about to seek our shores that they should be reasonably certain of admittance when they come. The policy of the Department is to insure, when practicable, a preliminary examination by our own medical officers of all aliens at the ports of embarkation, but as previously stated this is not permitted by all nations, and in any event it can be effectively carried out only by cooperation with the steamship companies. It is because of the necessarily unsatisfactory character and the incompleteness of our own inspection abroad that it is necessary to induce steamship companies to assist in making the examination effective. The fine of $100 is not at all unreasonable, considering the fact that it is imposed only in such cases as might have been detected by a careful examination before embarkation, and the results have fully proven its wisdom.

As the Commissioner-General has said in speaking of the excluded classes, "It is right to debar those who are affected, but it is wrong to permit them to start;" and the steamship companies who are deriving this great income from the steerage passengers should be willing, of course, to cooperate with the United States in excluding the defective classes.

THE MOST UNDESIRABLE CLASS HERETOFORE ADMITTED.

Having called attention to this amendment, I want now to go back to the statement made earlier in my remarks—that 6 per cent of all who come into the United States are over 45 years of age. Senators are aware, of course, of the complaint that is made that we are getting too large a percentage of the defective classes, and that our hospitals and asylums and other public institutions are burdened with them.

There is in this class, and among other classes to a lesser degree, a large number in whom no specific disease is detected, and yet one knows at a glance that they are of poor physique or of low vitality. They are in a condition that may be the result of heredity or of a low grade of living. They have not what we would call stamina, and while they can not be placed in the class of those specifically diseased, they are liable to find their way into some public institution, and ought not to be permitted to land.

The attention of Congress has been called to this matter by the President in his message, where he has spoken of the greed of the steamship companies, and I have brought together the opinions of quite a good many persons who have given thought to the matter, among them William Williams, esq., who was for several years the commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island, and who was succeeded by Commissioner Watchorn. Mr. Williams, in his report for 1903, says:

> But these laws do not reach a large body of immigrants who, while not of this class, are yet generally undesirable, because unintelligent, of low vitality, of poor physique, able to perform only the cheapest kind of manual labor, desirous of locating almost exclusively in the cities, by their competition tending to reduce the standard of living of the American wageworker, and unfitted mentally or morally for good citizenship.

In his report for 1904 he again calls attention to the matter, and says:

> We are receiving too many immigrants whose physical condition is poor. The law now excludes idiots, insane persons, epileptics, and those suffering from a loathsome or a dangerous contagious disease. To exclude aliens suffering from other physical or mental ailments it is generally necessary to show that they are likely to become public charges, and yet it is obviously impossible to exclude on this ground all persons whose physical condition is poor. I think that in all instances in which the United States Marine-Hospital surgeons, who conduct the medical examinations at the immigrant stations, certify in writing that the physical condition of an immigrant, dependent for support upon his own physical exertions, is below a certain standard to be designated by them by some appropriate term, whether this be "low vitality," "poor physique," or some other similar expression, or that he is "senile," such immigrant should be excluded, subject to certain reasonable exceptions of the character described in the preceding paragraph.

I have other quotations from him and other writers upon the general subject, but I will only call attention to what has been said by our consul at Bremen, where so many aliens embark:

> As to the emigrants that passed through Bremen during the period under discussion, I found that they averaged about the same as they did in former years. By far the greater majority of them were stalwart men and women in good health and of splendid physique, and their appearance gave every promise of their becoming good and useful citizens. And when I inquired of some of these uncouth-looking men, as I occasionally did, why they should leave their fatherland, their humble homes, their friends, and the traditions of their forefathers, to start off, oftentimes with their wives and small children, for a far-off strange land, I invariably learned that the one strong, overruling desire with them was simply to better their condition in life.

In this he evidently refers to that class between the ages of 14 and 44 who constitute such a large majority of all who come to this country, but he adds:

> A very small percentage of the people in the long line of the procession that passed by almost day by day, are such as ought to be rejected, but can not be, because our medical examination can not detect any disease or any other physical defect in or about them. Yet a mere glance at them suffices to make one feel morally certain that they will be an objectionable addition to our population. How best to sift out these cases, of which, fortunately, there are but comparatively few, is one of the many problems the great question of immigration continually presents.

I might go on and read the opinions of others, but deem it unnecessary.

Section 2 enumerates the classes who are not permitted to enter the United States, and if amended as proposed it will read:

> All idiots—

And we have added "imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics," to make it more definite—> insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge,

Mr. HALE. I was rather puzzled, looking over the bill, on reading the language applied to insanity. It seems that there are subdivisions—persons subject to insanity and those actually insane. I wish the Senator would explain just what is the purport and limitation and legal operation of the insane classification.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have always supposed that the act of 1903 was an effort to reach every case of unsound mind. A person may land who gives every evidence of sanity, and who is, in fact, sane, but upon looking up his record they find that he has been insane within five years. So he, by the provisions of this law, is debarred. The law also debars a person who has had two or more attacks of insanity at any time during his lifetime, not necessarily within the last five years.

Mr. HALE. In other words, all insane persons; insane now?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Insane now, who have been insane within five years, or who during their entire life have had two attacks of insanity.

Mr. HALE. "All insane persons" covers those who are now insane—who are insane at the time the law is put in force.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. HALE. And the bill includes persons who have been insane within five years previous—that is, any person who has at any time within five years been insane. That is it?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. HALE. The other is intended to embrace the larger class—that is, persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time in their lives?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. HALE. That straightens it out. I can see the object of the section.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Now, after going through this list, which also includes paupers, persons likely to become a public charge, beggars, persons affected with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease, the bill adds:

> Persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living.

We have intended to make that broad enough to give the examining surgeons a wide discretion in judging a person's general appearance, taking into consideration what evidence there is of poor physique, low vitality, or anything else of that character which bears upon the question of his ability to obtain a livelihood by his own exertions.

Mr. HALE. The Senator's statement is very interesting and important. Can the Senator, from his study and investigation of the subject, tell us whether the statistics show at which of the decades in age the largest numbers come in—that is, whether it is from 20 to 30 in age, or 30 to 40 in age, or 40 to 50, or are there no statistics showing those facts?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not think the statistics are published in that form.

Mr. HALE. There are no statistics by decades?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think not. If there are such, they have escaped by attention.

Mr. DRYDEN. Before the Senator passes from this matter, I should like to ask him if he knows whether it is the practice at the immigrant stations to exercise a more rigid scrutiny in examining people above the age of 45? The Senator has stated that 6 per cent of our immigrants are 45 years old or older. It is evident enough that immigrants who have arrived at that age are not as likely to become as desirable citizens as those of younger age, for the reason that they have arrived at a time of life when their vitality either has declined or soon will begin to decline.

I wish to know whether the immigrant officials examine those immigrants with more thoroughness, with more care, with a view to protecting the country against having foisted upon it a class who are more likely to become a public burden than are immigrants of younger age?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that great care has been given to the examination of this class, but the surgeons have been very much troubled, because, for instance, where there was brought before them a person, evidently of poor physique or low vitality, they could discover no specific disease. Yet he was defective. He might be defective mentally or physically without the physicians being able to say he had a contagious or a loathsome disease, or in fact any definite disease. And it is to meet the difficulty referred to by Mr. Williams in his report which I have just read that this particular amendment to section 2 has been suggested.

Mr. DRYDEN. Is it the Senator's idea that that would confer upon the immigration officials sufficient authority and power to make such an exclusion of people of older age?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That is my opinion. This matter has been discussed with the Department, and I took the trouble, after this clause was drafted, to go to the Department of Justice and discuss it with the particular officer in that Department who has charge of cases arising under the immigration laws. His judgment was that the provision was sufficient.

Mr. HALE. Do the ship's papers contain information as to the age of immigrants?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes; age, sex, nationality, and various other items.

Mr. HALE. Those are given on the other side?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes. The law requires that manifests of alien passengers shall be made at the time and place of embarkation.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Maine were abroad and were coming back to this country, he could not get in without giving his age. It was demanded of me last May, and I gave mine.

Mr. HALE. I have never been sensitive on that point, but I do not remember ever to have been asked my age.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The two amendments which have been under discussion are to my mind the most important provided for in the bill. I refer to the amendment to section 2, which is intended to exclude a considerable class of defectives not specifically defined in the present law, and that broadening the provision which imposes upon steamship companies a fine for bringing to the United States alien passengers suffering from certain diseases, when such affliction might have been discovered at a port of embarkation and the alien denied passage.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator a question for information. I notice that section 2 prohibits persons from coming into the United States who have been insane within five years and also those who have had one or more attacks of insanity. I have understood the discussion which has been going on here upon that subject, but I do not understand why if a man has been insane at all he should be admitted into the United States. Neither do I understand why it would be more difficult to ascertain whether a man had been insane at all than to ascertain whether he had had two or more attacks of insanity. If he has been an insane person, that fact would, of course, be publicly known. It would be much more difficult, in my judgment, to ascertain whether a man had had two or more attacks of insanity than to know whether he had been an absolutely insane person, and I do not see why that distinction is made.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That distinction is in the existing law.

Mr. PILES. I think it ought to go out.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to say to the Senator from Washington that I think it is a very proper provision in the law, for this reason: Many times a person has an insane attack from accident, and he is not virtually an insane person. The attack of insanity may come from an accident. Many times females become insane from certain causes, yet they are not insane persons, although certain attacks bring insanity. I think the provision in the law is perfectly correct as it is. If, perchance, a person has had more than one or two attacks, as the case may be, then there is doubt as to whether there is an original cause of insanity in the person. I think the provision is very proper, indeed, and it should stand as it is.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I want simply to add, while we are speaking of the insane classes, that it is utterly impossible to frame a measure which will suit every case and do exact justice in every instance. The framers of this statute evidently had in mind the thought that a person who had been insane within five years ought not to come in, and if back of the five-year period it appeared that the person had suffered two attacks of insanity the danger of further attacks were so strongly indicated that he ought not to be admitted.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I was not finding fault so much with the question of two or more attacks. I can understand where a man might have a very mild attack or two mild attacks of insanity and recover from them. But where a man has been absolutely insane I do not see any reason why because for five years before his admission to the United States he has not been an insane person that we should admit this man. In other words, if the insanity had passed away for a period of five years, I do not see that that should admit him into the United States. I think if a man has been once insane he ought not to be admitted into the United States, and that this provision as to five years should be stricken from the bill. That is my idea.

Mr. PERKINS. In view of what the Senator from Washington has stated in relation to this matter, the best evidence that the law is defective in that respect is the fact that in the asylums of the Western States which care for the insane there is a very much larger percentage of those of foreign birth who are suffering from the affliction of insanity than there are of those of American birth. Therefore, the law has undoubtedly been lax in that respect, which has permitted people who have insanity in the family to be admitted into this country as immigrants. Insanity is a great affliction; it is undoubtedly hereditary; and while there may be temporary causes, perhaps, yet I think we can dispense with that class of immigrants.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I would suggest that that clause of the law has not been in operation a sufficient length of time to indicate what its ultimate effect will be. It is in the law of 1903. I called the attention of the Senate earlier in my remarks to the considerable length of time the largest percentage of aliens detained in public institutions had been in the United States. The fact is that few aliens who have been admitted under the law of 1903 are in penal or charitable institutions, and to thoroughly test the effectiveness of the provision intended to debar persons of these classes from entering the United States will require time.

MINOR AMENDMENTS.

Now, Mr. President, I have called attention to what I conceive to be the two chief amendments to the pending bill.

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator passes from section 2 I desire to ask his attention to some matters.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I was going to speak of section 2 further; but I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I will not, then, interrupt the Senator for the present.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Under the existing law all idiots are debarred, but the administration of the law has shown it is necessary to add "imbeciles, feeble-minded persons," and those words have been inserted. There are those who ought not to be admitted, but who can not be certified as being idiots, but they are so far inclined that way that they ought, in the discretion of the examining officers, to be kept out.

The experience of the immigration officers at Ellis Island has been that while polygamists are debarred under the present law, they were compelled to admit persons who could not be proved to be polygamists, but who freely admitted their belief in the practice of polygamy. This amendment was added at the suggestion of those officers.

Again, the present law provides for the exclusion of prostitutes, and at the suggestion of the administration officers we have added "or women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose." That was suggested, I think, by Commissioner Watchorn.

Then, again, there has been added at the suggestion of the Department this clause:

Persons who have been induced to migrate to this country in consequence of offers, solicitations, promises, or agreements, oral, written, or printed, express or implied, to perform labor of any kind, skilled or unskilled, in this country.

That covers those who are so frequently spoken of as the contract-labor class. The clause I have just read was in the act of 1903 and went out by misapprehension, I conclude. The contract-labor law is in the statute now, I may say, only by inference, but there are provisions in sections 4, 5, 12, and 13 relating to the contract-labor law, and we are constantly deporting those who are here contrary to it. Yet, the real enactment which I have just read is not in the law, and we have restored it as it was in the act of 1903, so there shall be no question in the courts as to our right to debar contract laborers.

Then there is another amendment in section 2 which is intended to do away with what is known as the "padrone system," by which men bring over from Italy and from other countries boys from 12 to 16 years of age and control their lives and their earnings, their goings and their comings, until they reach their majority. This clause is as follows:

All children under 17 years of age unaccompanied by their parents, unless coming to join parents already in this country who are able to support them, or unless, in the case of death of both parents, they are coming to join brothers or sisters already in the United States who are willing and able to support them.

Mr. BACON. It is in that connection that I wanted to ask the attention of the Senator to a matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Gladly.

Mr. BACON. I do not know how far this matter has been considered by the committee. Under the bill, and also largely under the existing law, certain contract labor is now permitted to enter. For instance, right in connection with what the Senator has just read there is this proviso:

That skilled labor may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country.

That is a pretty wide and liberal provision, and one, it seems to me, where there would be practically no limit upon the admission, wherever those who had control of the matter sought to exercise a liberal discretion. It would be very difficult to say in what particular class you could find skilled labor needed where there was not skilled labor unemployed. But that is not the point I am coming to. I mention that simply by way of inducement in what I am going to suggest to the Senator.

Then there are certain classes excluded from the operation of the law in the succeeding proviso:

And provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession.

To that point in the clause of course you might say none of that is labor, but it adds:

Or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants.

Now, with the recognition of the fact by this provision of law that contract labor should be permitted under certain circumstances in certain classes of labor, upon what principle, I would ask the Senator, does the committee draw the line at domestic persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants?

I will state to the Senator very frankly the object of my inquiry, premising first that I understand the purpose of the law in this exclusion to be mainly directed for the protection of the mechanical classes of the country, who do not desire that persons shall be admitted here who will be in competition with them in their work. I think I am correct in that.

Now, upon what reason is there an exclusion of agricultural laborers? If there is in the country a very great need and demand for agricultural labor, and if circumstances are such that it can not be had in any way practically except by contracting with such laborers on the other side, for what reason should they be excluded? For what reason should persons be excluded from the privilege of contracting with parties and bringing them over to this country for agricultural occupations?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, that is a matter that has not been considered by the present Committee on Immigration. There is no amendment to the existing law proposed in that respect.

Mr. BACON. I know there is no amendment proposed.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. But I will say to the Senator from Georgia that it is a matter to which I have given some personal attention. One of the Senators now on this floor called me to the Marble Room some time ago and presented a gentleman from his State who was anxious to have agricultural laborers settle there, and he propounded the same inquiry. I sent him, with a letter of introduction, to the Commissioner-General of Immigration. The reply he received was simply that this clause was adopted for the purpose which the Senator has already suggested—for the protection of the skilled mechanics in the United States; that it was put in the law at the demand of what we call the "labor element." The country has acquiesced in the demand so made, and this provision in the law has been preserved. It has worked admirably; the country has accepted and become accustomed to its provisions, and, so far as I am aware, there is practically no demand or desire for its repeal.

Now, the Department is of the opinion that if we should make an exception of those who profess to come here for agricultural purposes it would be simply opening a broad doorway for fraud; that large numbers of persons would come ostensibly as farm laborers, but who, after a short time, would be found in the trades and in competition with the skilled labor of the United States. The Department was unable to suggest any amendment that will accomplish the purpose which the Senator has in his mind without doing away with the effective provisions of the clause which we are discussing.

Mr. BACON. I think there is a very general desire throughout the country to conform to that wish on the part of the skilled labor of the country, that there should not be introduced into this country skilled laborers to come into competition with them in mechanical pursuits. On the other hand, it is true that there is an exceedingly great necessity for an increased supply of laborers in agricultural pursuits. It seems to me that it would be entirely possible to have an examination of parties on the other side by which it could be ascertained whether they were skilled in any mechanical pursuit, and that if an amendment of this kind should be adopted, by which the strictly agricultural laborers are admitted, persons who have been trained in any mechanical pursuit could, upon such examination, be excluded from the privilege of coming as agricultural laborers.

Mr. President, I do not know that I would take the responsibility of offering an amendment on this subject, because I doubt very much, in the first place, whether the public sentiment has been educated up to it, and the matter has not been discussed sufficiently at large for that result to be secured. But there are some very cogent reasons why it should be done, and I want to call attention to one in particular.

The great object of this law is to exclude undesirable immigrants and to have a process of selection, as it were. There is no process of selection that would be as efficacious and as certain as that which would be found in the selection which would be made by one who went there for the purpose of securing laborers under a contract. He would be certain not to wish to get one who was diseased or who was mentally unfit or who was otherwise undesirable to be employed as an efficient laborer. If it were so arranged in the law that, without bringing here any of those who would be in competition with the mechanical class, and only those could be contracted for who were to be employed in agricultural pursuits solely, men who had no mechanical training, every man who sought to make a contract of that kind on the other side would himself be an agent for the purpose of eliminating from those who were thus brought to this country all of the undesirable class.

It so happens, Mr. President, if I am not unduly trespassing upon the Senator——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Not at all, sir.

Mr. BACON. It so happens that on account of peculiar conditions the most available of all immigrants—at least those who would be secured for agricultural pursuits—are from the Latin countries. Take Italy, the country from which we secure so large a number of immigrants. The agriculturists are north of the middle line of Italy, you might say, and are a very superior class of men to those who are in the southern part of Italy. Yet it is from the southern part of Italy that the voluntary immigration is received, because there conditions are less favorable and they are under greater inducement to try to improve their conditions, whereas those in the more northern part of Italy are in a superior condition; the condition in their own country is more tolerable, more satisfactory, and they do not come here so readily for the purpose of seeking their fortunes as adventurers or to seek simply day labor.

They are of a class that want something more certain than the possibility of day labor. They wish to know before they come what they are going to engage in. They are agriculturists at home, and the kind of agriculture in which they could be engaged in this country is largely of the same class as that in which they are occupied at home. But, in the absence of the ability to make an arrangement with them, that class, the most desirable of all classes of people who are eligible for immigration, are excluded because of this barrier, which says to a man, "You shall not make a contract with a man, however well fitted he may be to make a good citizen;" as a great many of them are. He must come over here and look for himself, and unless that is done he shall not be received. The result is that the best class of agricultural laborers do not come.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, permit me to ask the Senator from Georgia a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to ask my friend from Georgia a question in relation to his suggestion about inviting desirable immigrants from the north of Italy. I know in my own State they are very desirable as grape growers; they are skilled in raising figs and other semitropical fruits. If the law was amended in that repsect would it not permit railroads and other corporations to go to Japan and Korea and employ skilled laborers to work upon their roads?

Mr. BACON. I am not familiar with the oriental question, consequently I am not in a position to answer the question.

Mr. PERKINS. We can not segregate them, as I understand the present law.

Mr. BACON. The suggestion I made was not as to an indiscriminate liberty to employ persons to be brought to this country under contract, but those——

Mr. PERKINS. The Japanese are skilled horticulturists and florists and agriculturists. So are the Koreans, and some who would come under the Chinese-exclusion law. I know many horticulturists who would be very glad to make contracts with them for a term of years for wages that could secure their services. It seems to me it would be a very dangerous thing to amend the law in that respect.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I think that I can make a suggestion to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I will only interrupt the Senator to the extent of saying that I have merely taken the opportunity to make a suggestion upon the subject, for the reason that there are already excepted classes, and why there should be excepted classes of those who are to be employed as personal or domestic servants and at the same time those who are to be employed as servants to work upon the ground should be excluded I am unable to see.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I have before me a statement of the numbers admitted in the year 1905 by occupations. I find that 13,643 were in professional walks of life and in the skilled occupations there were 180,112; but the number of farm laborers was 142,000 and of men who had been actual farmers 18,000—I am giving the round numbers—of laborers, 287,450; merchants and dealers, 19,579; servants, 125,473, and of no occupation—which, I suppose, means women and children, mostly—232,018. Those numbers brought together make 1,018,936, and all other occupations are embraced in 7,563 persons not classified.

Now, there are a large number of farm laborers coming into this country; a larger number of common laborers and a considerable number of those who have owned farms in the old country. The difficulty is, when they get to this country the avenues to employment are so many and so various, many of which afford a so much higher rate of wages than can be derived from farm labor, they leave the farms and go to the manufacturing centers. Owing to this tendency there is an unequal distribution of incoming aliens among the various industries of the country, and the problem of directing immigrants to the agricultural districts is a very difficult one, although much time has been devoted to the study of it.

The committee proposes an amendment to the bill which it is hoped may have a tendency to relieve the congestion of alien immigrants in manufacturing centers, and in a measure answer the demand of agricultural districts for laborers and settlers. The amendment offered is in the form of a new section to the law, which provides for the establishment of a division of information in the Bureau of Immigration. It is proposed that this division shall gather from the various States and Territories such information as might aid incoming aliens in selecting a home, and shall publish it for the benefit of such aliens.

Upon the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY], the section was broadened until in its present form it provides that the different States and Territories desiring immigration may, at their own expense, send agents to the various immigrant stations of the United States to confer with incoming aliens, to present those considerations which might induce them to settle in the States and Territories represented by them, and giving the Commissioner-General of Immigration, under certain restrictions, the right to allow them to make a display of the products of their States or Territories at those stations.

I will not go further into that question, because I know that the Senator from Kentucky, who is deeply interested in it, as Kentucky very much desires agricultural laborers, wishes to speak upon it.

OUTGOING ALIENS.

Earlier in my remarks reference was made to the great numbers of aliens who go out of the country, no authentic record of which is kept by the Government. The only available statistics of this nature are those published by the steamship companies and from these it is possible to tell only approximately how many aliens return to their native countries. The number is great, however, and for the purpose of making this very desirable information available in the future the following amendment to the law is proposed:

That it shall further be the duty of the master or commanding officer of every vessel taking alien passengers out of the United States, from any port thereof, to file before departure therefrom, with the collector of customs of such port, a complete list of all such alien passengers taken on board for the purpose aforesaid. Such lists shall contain the name, age, sex, nationality, residence in the United States, occupation, and the time of last arrival of every such alien in the United States.

The fact that more than a million aliens came into this country last year is much heralded, but the fact that in all probability more than one-third of the total went out during the same time is rarely mentioned. The amendment, if enacted into law will in no way restrict or improve immigration, but it will enable us to know just how many and who are added to the alien population of the country in any particular year, and the value of such statistics is obvious.

Numerous minor amendments to the present law are proposed by this bill, but all are of an administrative character and I do not care to consume the time of the Senate in discussing them. In one way or another nearly all of them center around section 2, which enumerates the excluded classes and which I have already discussed at length.

In closing, I want to say that, in my opinion, this bill, if enacted into law, will go a long way in the direction of making perfect the already excellent immigration act of 1903, and I believe that it will not only eliminate from the class of aliens now coming pretty nearly all of the objectionable and defective ones, whether their defects be of mind, body, or of morals. More than this, I believe it will have the effect, not only of preventing the undesirable classes from entering the country, but of preventing them from ever leaving their native shores to cross the sea only to find the doors of the United States hopelessly closed against them.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to refer to a matter which is not one of amendment. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] has evidently given very careful study to this question, and therefore, returning to the matter about which I was interrogating him a moment ago, I desire to ask him if he has any information as to the extent that the second proviso of this bill, found on page 6, has been taken advantage of?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In which section is the proviso to which the Senator from Georgia refers found?

Mr. BACON. It is found in section 2. It provides:

And provided further, That skilled labor may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country.

That is a very peculiar provision, and I should like to know if the Senator from Vermont has investigated that matter and can give us any information as to how far that provision has ever been taken advantage of, and what, if anything, has ever been done under it?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I understand it has been taken advantage of to a very limited extent. I have papers in my committee room in regard to one instance, where a manufacturer of certain kinds of glass brought over some skilled laborers. I do not remember how many there were, nor very distinctly about the results, except that they were deported under this section. My attention was, however, called to the matter, and I repeat that I think very few have been admitted under the provision referred to.

Mr. BACON. That is the exact point to which I want to call the Senator's attention. It seems to me that there is a discrimination in the provision of the law—I am not speaking of the amendments now, for which the committee is particularly responsible, but I am speaking of the law containing the provision that those who desire to employ persons in Europe strictly as personal or domestic servants are permitted to do so.

Now, the Senator says, when I suggest the desirability of having a like privilege for those who wish to employ servants or laborers to come here to engage in agricultural pursuits, that that will not do at all, as it would, in his opinion, open the door to fraud. It seems to me, in the same way, the same reply might be made as to those who are employed as personal or domestic servants. It looks as if that were done in response to the demand of a certain influential class who want to be made exceptions to the general law. They wish to have the privilege of having servants, selected by them in Europe or elsewhere, brought to this country to be used by them in personal or domestic service.

But that is not so marked in its discrimination, it seems to me, as the particular proviso to which I ask the attention of the Senator, which goes to the extent of absolutely antagonizing in a degree what is the main purpose of the labor contract law, which is to protect the mechanical population of this country, those engaged in mechanical pursuits, from persons being brought here from Europe under contract to be brought in competition with them. This proviso, permitting the contracts for skilled laborers, is in direct conflict with that design and is evidently, while not so intended, something which would in practical operation be unfriendly to those engaged in mechanical pursuits in this country—I say "evidently," but, of course, that is probably too strong a word—but it seems to me to be intended to give all persons who are interested in the great mechanical industries of this country the opportunity, when they may be short of labor, to supply that labor by going to Europe, making contracts for such labor, and bringing that labor here.

The Senator says it has been only utilized partially in the case of the glass workers. Well, in the same way it can be utilized by any of the other great mechanical industries of the country—iron works, potteries, textile, wood, and all other manufacturing enterprises—and whenever they are in a position where they are suffering by reason of the inadequacy of the supply of mechanical labor for their particular industry, the law gives them an opportunity to supply the need. Here is the great agricultural industry of the country, which is not in any manner in conflict with those engaged in mechanical pursuits. When the great agricultural industry of the country is suffering from a lack of labor, there is no possibility that they may contract for labor to be brought here upon the ground that unemployed labor in the same line of work can not be found. Now, why should there be that discrimination against the agricultural industry of the country?

If the policy of the country is to exclude all immigrants secured through contract, that is one thing. But to admit skilled immigrants secured by contract when needed by the mechanical or manufacturing industries of the country, and to deny to the agricultural industries the right to secure unskilled immigrants by contract when they need their labor equally as urgently is quite another thing. It is the unfair discrimination now found in the law against the agricultural interests of the country of which I complain.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I am not here to defend that provision of the law as it stands to-day. That is a principle which has been written into the law for a considerable length of time, and I have never heard any particular complaint made of the operation of it, so far as this exception is concerned. There are a considerable number of people in the country who doubt the general advisability of a contract-labor law in itself, but the great majority are now in favor of it.

I would suggest to the Senator, as I suppose he speaks for his State to some extent, that I understand from the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] that many of the Southern States are anxious to bring contract laborers into those sections.

In section 6 of the existing law, which makes it unlawful to assist or encourage any importation or immigration of any alien by contract, there is a provision which reads as follows:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to States or Territories, the District of Columbia, or places subject to the jurisdiction of the United States advertising the inducements they offer for immigration thereto, respectively.

I know that some of the States have taken action and have sent agents to Europe for this purpose. In fact, the State which I in part represent did that very thing a few years ago and succeeded in introducing a very good class of immigrants into one of the mountain sections of Vermont. Under this law, if a State desires to take action, I can see no objection to it.

Mr. BACON. The Senator does not realize the fact that it is very much more difficult to put the machinery of a State into motion than it is to have individual enterprise avail itself of an opportunity of this kind. I have no doubt in the world, if this barrier were removed, the agricultural interests, not simply of my State, but very largely of the South, would take advantage of the opportunity, or individuals would do so, to bring over to this country the most desirable of all the population that could be found on the other side in the way of immigrants—that is, those who are now engaged in agricultural labor.

The Senator alluded to the fact that machinery has been devised by which it is proposed to give opportunity for distribution of those coming into the country at present, so that they may be sent to agricultural districts, and thus distributed through the agricultural regions and employed in agricultural pursuits. But the fact stands that the large majority—in fact, almost all of those who now come to this country—are not those who are seeking agricultural employment; they are not those who were engaged in agricultural employment before they came to this country, and they are not those whom it is easy to enlist, or, I might go further and say, they are not those among whom is to be found the most desirable class to be enlisted in the work of agriculture.

There is a crying and growing need for intelligent, reliable labor in agricultural pursuits, and it seems to me, while, as the Senator says, they are not the advocates or the defenders of this bill, yet the committee is charged with the consideration of the question and with the suggestion of measures making the required changes in the law. I will say to the Senator that I will not offer an amendment on the subject, because I do not suppose, in the absence of the approval of the committee, there would probably be any change made in the law. But I would desire, if any change were made, that it should be most closely guarded, so that there could be no intrusion upon the well-settled policy of the country to prevent contract labor for those who are to be engaged in mechanical pursuits; but it seems to me that it could be so guarded that, by proper examination, of course, it can be ascertained who are trained in mechanical pursuits, and they should be excluded from the privilege of coming as agricultural laborers. A very large benefit could be derived from a change in the law in this particular, and at the same time the main purpose of this entire immigration law be largely advanced and assisted in the fact that those who were seeking to make a contract would have the highest inducement to eliminate from those with whom they should make contracts those who are undesirable as immigrants and future citizens of this country.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think it would be a great deal better to eliminate from the present law the provisions which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] seems to think discriminative against agricultural laborers, than to broaden the law with such a provision as he has in mind.

The Senator from Georgia, I think, is mistaken when he suggests that the object of the law prohibiting the immigration of contract laborers is to protect those engaged in mechanical pursuits in which skilled labor is employed. It goes a great deal farther. It is intended to protect labor that hardly comes under the head of skilled labor, although, broadly speaking, it may be mechanical labor, as all labor by hand would probably come under that head.

One of the great troubles about any law that would permit the introduction of contract agricultural labor is that if it was brought in any great quantity it could only receive employment during a very small portion of the year. Bring in 10,000 agricultural laborers as such expressly, and they would find employment, probably, from March or April until the crops were gathered.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. In the large field of cotton production, which is not an unimportant part of agricultural labor, it takes twelve months' labor to make a cotton crop, and very frequently, strange as it may sound, thirteen months. It is frequently the case that the cotton crop is not gathered until the close of January of the year succeeding the one in which it was grown.

Mr. PATTERSON. I suppose, Mr. President, that is one of the hardships. Surely the Senator from Georgia would not desire to have discrimination in such agriculturists as were introduced in favor of the cotton industry alone. I am inclined to think that the raising of the sugar cane as well as the raising of the cotton plant is an industry that requires pretty constant labor the year around.

But, Mr. President, that is but a very small portion of the products of agricultural pursuits, and it would be an anomaly to find upon the statute book a law that permitted contracts to be made for labor to produce cotton and labor to produce sugar cane and discriminating against the great corn-raising section of the country, the great wheat-raising section of the country, the oats and barley raising sections of the country, and the great fruit-raising section of the country. So that while there are exceptions to the rule probably—certainly there are in the case of cotton, because the Senator from Georgia makes that statement—it must be perfectly clear that it will be utterly impossible to bring into this country contract agricultural labor as such that would not be labor that could only be employed in that particular calling for about four months in a year, or five at the outside, and during the rest of the year would necessarily be thrown into every other field of industry.

Mr. BACON. The probability is, Mr. President, that no contract could be made with a laborer in a foreign country unless you could give him a year's work. He would not come for six months.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am inclined to think that if a proper amount of information were conveyed to the laborers in Europe there would be no difficulty whatever in securing all the labor that was necessary for every calling for a term of a month, realizing, as the laborer would, that having entered this country under a contract by which his passage was paid his coming to this country was made very easy, so that he could come when otherwise he might not or would not be able to come. He would come, even though the employment was for a month, being quite willing then, Mr. President, to take his chances in the future.

Mr. President, I desire to express just one further thought in the matter. The great evil that legislation of this kind is intended to remedy can be illustrated by the use to which the repeal of this law might be put at the present time. We have in some of the Eastern States quite a large strike in the coal fields. I do not know how many coal miners and coal laborers are out of employment—whether the number be 25,000, or 50,000 or 150,000 men. They are engaged in a strike. It is not necessary to raise the question as to whether it is a good strike or a bad strike, or whether the aims that the strikers seek to accomplish are for the benefit of the country at large or for the benefit of those who are engaged in it. It is sufficient to know that, were it not for this law, ships would be loaded to-day with contract laborers brought from the Mediterranean countries to be thrown into the coal mines to take the place of the labor that is now out on a strike. Thereby, as a penalty for entering upon a strike, those who are engaged in it and their families would be literally thrust from their homes and denied, except in some other calling or in some other locality, employment in the future.

Therefore, Mr. President, it seems to me that it is much better to circumscribe the law than to enlarge it. Various callings suffer for the want of labor in this country. There is no doubt about that. That is because of the prosperity in every department of industry. The growth of the demand for labor seems to be in excess of the supply; but because that is the case, it is not a sufficient reason for throwing down the barriers that prevent the labor of Europe, pauper or otherwise, desirable or otherwise, from being flooded into this country under contracts by individuals or great corporations, simply because they happen to have temporary trouble with their present or their late employees.

This country is growing quite fast enough in population, Mr. President. It is making wonderful strides in population, as well as in industry and in commercial prosperity of every kind. It is not possible for everybody to have everything that he wants in order that he may take all the advantage that is possible in this state of prosperity. There must be limitations; and if it is shortage of labor that can not be supplied otherwise than by throwing down the barriers that prevent the influx of European labor under contract, then, Mr. President, they had better submit for the time being to an inconvenience, as we are all constantly compelled to do by reason of our utter inability to secure everything which we desire to add to our share of the prosperity that is going on.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. McCREARY. I supposed the Senator was through.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I was going to suggest, Mr. President, that we take up the committee amendments at this time, unless there is some reason to the contrary.

Mr. McCREARY. If the Senator from Vermont has concluded, I desire to address the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. McCREARY. If the Senator has concluded his remarks, I will say that one of the first amendments to come up is in the first part of the bill. I propose to speak on that, as I announced.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill be read for amendment.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments reported by the Committee on Immigration be first acted on as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. McCREARY. I announced when this bill first came up, and before the Senator from Vermont addressed the Senate, that I desired to submit some remarks on it. If the Senator from Vermont has finished, I desire to speak a few moments, and I think I have that right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I very gladly yield. I made the motion in regard to the reading of the bill under a misapprehension. I thought it was according to the Senator's desire, because I knew he wanted to address himself to the Senate on the question of the head tax, which is the second committee amendment. I hope he will not think I was attempting to crowd him. I thought I was carrying out his wishes.

Mr. McCREARY. The explanation is satisfactory.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCREARY. Have I the floor now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I merely desire to suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that it will not interfere in the least with his making his address—which we are all very glad and anxious to have him make—that we should put the bill regularly before the Senate, dispense with the first reading, and have the bill read for amendment. We have not had that agreed to as yet.

Mr. McCREARY. I am perfectly willing for that to be done when I complete my remarks. I desire now to address the Senate on the pending bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I introduced a bill on the 8th of last January to amend the existing law on the subject of the immigration of aliens into the United States. Important provisions of my bill have been incorporated in the bill now under consideration. I am also a member of the Committee on Immigration, and I helped to prepare the pending bill, and I am in favor of its passage.

There is no problem confronting the people of the United States which deserves more earnest attention and careful consideration than the immigration problem. It involves questions which not only reach the homes and the farms and the industries of our country, but also the welfare of the people and the degeneracy or elevation of the human race in our country.

I admire the sentiment that in this free country we should welcome the people of the world, and that America should be the home of the liberty-loving and downtrodden and oppressed of all nations; but I should like to add also the plain but expressive words that America should be the home of the worthy, and that the undesirable immigrants should be kept out and the desirable immigrants should be welcomed.

If the immigrants coming to our country are beginning to be a menace to American homes and American industries and American civilization, should we not do all that can be done to separate the worthy from the unworthy—keep up the best standards and do justice to the desirable immigrants and do our duty to our home people? Should we not by legislation exclude the objectionable element and encourage the immigrants we want, who come here to stay, and who are healthy and resolute and industrious, and who appreciate American institutions?

The President of the United States very appropriately said in his last annual message to Congress:

> The prime need is to keep out all immigrants who will not make good American citizens. The laws now existing for the exclusion of undesirable immigrants should be strengthened. * * *
> What we should desire to find out is the individual quality of the individual man. In my judgment, with this end in view, we shall have to prepare through our own agents a far more rigid inspection in the countries from which the immigrants come. It will be a great deal better to have fewer immigrants, but all of the right kind, than a great number of immigrants, many of whom are necessarily of the wrong kind. As far as possible we wish to limit the immigration to this country to persons who propose to become citizens of this country, and we can well afford to insist upon adequate scrutiny of the character of those who are thus proposed for future citizenship.

Mr. President, a review of immigration statistics and reports discloses an increase in the number of foreigners annually coming to our country which is startling. In the year ending June 30, 1905, there came to the United States 1,026,000 alien immigrants, being a greater number of immigrants than came to our country during the one hundred and sixty-nine years of our colonial life which intervened between the first landing at Jamestown and the Declaration of Independence, and a greater number than came to the United States from 1800 to 1840.

The statistics of immigration which are available show that since 1820 22,931,983 aliens came to the United States. In the year 1820 8,385 immigrants came to the United States. In 1860, forty years later, they numbered 133,143. The number of alien immigrants who came to the United States in 1900 was 448,000. In the year 1905, only five years later, the number of immigrants who came to the United States had more than doubled. At the rate they are now coming they would equal the population of Kentucky in two years, and equal the combined population of Delaware, Nevada, Montana, Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming in one year. At the ratio of increase, it would only require four generations for our country to reach the limit of the density of population, and by that time we would have eight or nine hundred millions of people, or a territory as densely populated as the Empire of China.

I present a table showing the annual immigration to the United States from 1820 to 1905, inclusive, furnished by the Commissioner-General of Immigration:

Number of immigrants arrived in the United States each year from 1820 to 1905, both inclusive.

An analysis of immigration statistics presents an interesting and instructive lesson when we consider the character and class of the immigrants now coming to our country and the class and character of the immigrants who came to our country up to 1890. Those who came to our country up to the last fifteen years were the class of people that were by nature possessed with instincts and aspirations kindred to our own, and with love and admiration for our institutions. They were, in the main, the same race of people to which we belonged, and came from the countries whence our fathers came. They were persons of courage, energy, and lofty purpose, and were in every respect fitted to assimilate our ideas, hopes, and conditions, and became valuable additions to our citizenship.

Immigrants from England, Scotland, Ireland, Germany, France, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and Switzerland, and countries in northern Europe have always been welcome and still are welcome, for many of our people are descended from them, and we would be untrue to our lineage not to welcome them.

The whole number of immigrants which came to our country from 1820 to 1905 from England, Scotland, and Ireland amounted to 7,286,443. In 1851 these countries sent us 272,740, but the immigration from these countries is now decreasing and has fallen off 40 per cent.

The immigration from Ireland formerly ranged from 60,000 to 70,000 per annum. From 1820 to 1902 Ireland sent us 4,000,000 of immigrants, and it was said that the Irish race was being transplanted from Ireland to the United States. In 1904 only 37,000 immigrants came from Ireland, 20,000 of whom were women; so there was a falling off of about one-half.

From Germany came to our country, from 1820 to 1905, 5,187,092. Two hundred and fifteen thousand immigrants came from Germany in 1854; but German immigration has been decreasing and has fallen off more than 30 per cent.

Scandinavia, consisting of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, furnished 105,326 immigrants to the United States in 1882, but in 1902 these countries furnished only 19,228.

France has never furnished a large quota to our list of immigrants. The largest number came in 1850, being 20,126; but the number of immigrants coming from France has greatly decreased since that time.

I call special attention to the statement I am about to make, because it shows what a wonderful change has occurred in immigration to the United States.

In 1869 the immigrants from Austria-Hungary, Italy, Poland, and Russia were about one hundredth of the number from England, Scotland, Ireland, France, Germany, and Scandinavia; in 1880 about one-tenth; in 1894 nearly equal to it; in 1901 the immigration from Austria-Hungary, Italy, Poland, and Russia was three times as great to the United States as from the other countries just named.

During the past fiscal year the greatest number of immigrants came to our country from Austria-Hungary, which sent 275,693, or 27 per cent of the whole number; Italy sent 221,479, or 22 per cent, and Russia, 184,897, or 18 per cent, and Asia sent 26,186, or 4 per cent; so that Austria-Hungary, Italy, Russia, and Asia sent last year to the United States nearly three-fourths of the 1,026,000, which came to our country.

It has been asserted by those who have studied the immigration question with great care that one great reason our immigration from nations which furnished our country in the past so many worthy and desirable immigrants has decreased is because so many undesirable immigrants are now coming to the United States.

It may well be asked here, Where did the large number of immigrants go who came to our country last year? The Commissioner-General of Immigration says, "315,511 were destined to New York; 210,708 to Pennsylvania; 72,150 to Massachusetts; 72,770 to Illinois; 57,258 to New Jersey, and 49,351 to Ohio." Thus it appears that 777,748, or 76 per cent of the 1,026,000 immigrants who came to our country in 1905, went to six States, and the Rocky Mountain region and the West received but 43,571, and the States south of the Mason and Dixon line 46,343, or 4½ per cent. Maryland, West Virginia, and Florida each received nearly 9,000, Louisiana 5,000, Texas 4,000; Kentucky received but 618, Tennessee 782, North Carolina 183, South Carolina 328, Georgia 518, and Arkansas 432.

These figures suggest that a very large number of immigrants who came to this country last year found places to locate in only six States out of the forty-five, and that over 300,000 of them went to the State of New York and 210,000 went to the State of Pennsylvania. If immigrants continue to go to those States in that way there will be a serious problem to solve in those States. These figures suggest another serious problem. While we of the South have the race problem constantly with us, and development, both educational and industrial, is hampered and influenced because the South is biracial, nevertheless both races speak the same language and have for generations lived under the same government, and have worked in harmony, while the people of New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and New Jersey have with them not the problem of two races, but the problem of many races, and the influx each year of hundreds of thousands of immigrants who are unfamiliar with our language, ignorant of our manners and customs, and without any conception of our Government, and the people of these States are called upon to solve a stupendous problem, which not only concerns amalgamation of these divers races into proper citizenship, but also the economic question as to how they can be cared for and controlled.

The extent and the importance of the immigration problem can not be properly shown without presenting the social effects of immigration and the filling of our prisons, almshouses, and asylums with foreigners, thereby entailing extra burdens upon our people.

According to statistics presented by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, and by Prescott F. Hall, secretary of the Immigration League, it appears that 44 per cent of the crime committed by white persons in the United States is charged to the native element and 56 per cent to the foreign element, and under the census of 1890 the number of native-born whites in penitentiaries was 12,842 and the number of those of foreign birth or parentage was 15,598, or 54 per cent of the total; in other words, the foreign white element, which was two-fifths of the total, furnished three-fifths of the white criminals of the United States at that time.

The same census shows that, not counting the feeble-minded and idiots, 33 per cent of the insane of the United States were of foreign birth, as compared with 28 per cent in 1880, and although the foreign born constituted in 1890 only 14 per cent of the total population they furnished two and one-third times their normal portion of insane, and comparing an equal number of the foreign element and the native element of the year 1905 the foreigners furnished three times as many paupers as the native element.

Of all the aliens confined in our criminal and penal institutions in 1904, 32 per cent of them were of the Celtic and Teutonic races of northern and western Europe, and 64 per cent of them were of the Slavic and Iberic races of southern and eastern Europe.

In 1905 the total number of inmates in our criminal and penal institutions was 349,885. Of this number, 97,074, or 28 per cent, were of foreign birth, and the foreign-born population of the United States is only 14 per cent of the whole population; in other words, while they furnish a little more than one-seventh of our population, they furnish about one-third of our criminals.

It should also be stated that the number of illiterates over 14 years of age who came to the United States in 1904 was 172,856, and the number of illiterates in 1905, 239,091, or an increase of illiterates of 66,235 in one year.

Senators may speak conservatively and kindly about immigration to the United States, but I believe that the facts which I have stated are alarming. I believe they need attention by Congress.

The question of restricting immigration is very important and calls for the exercise of conservatism and judicious legislation.

De Tocqueville, with far-seeing vision, wrote of American immigration nearly three-fourths of a century ago, "No power on earth can close upon immigrants that fertile country which offers resources to all industries and a refuge from all want." His declaration has grown in importance until people in every part of the civilized world are watching the prosperity, growth, progress, and attractions of our great country, and as the years roll by the desire of foreigners to come to our country grows and increases.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] spoke with great force and appropriateness on the progress and prosperity of our country, and I heard him with much pleasure.

While we should always be ready to welcome desirable and worthy immigrants, we should remember our duty to our fellowmen, and we should keep constantly in mind that our duty is to our own people and our own country. We have received millions of strangers within our gates and treated them as friends and brothers. The law of self-protection, which is the first law of nature, is now becoming of pressing and conspicuous importance. I believe in the elevation and the betterment of mankind in all lands and among all races, and all men deserve credit who work to advance civilization and Christianity, but we should not imperil our own household or detract from our own superb citizenship.

The report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration discloses the fact that undesirable immigration is largely due to the methods of steamship companies and their agents that ply their unlawful practices of getting immigrants for the gain of transportation. Every person who has watched the trend of passenger steamship traffic between the United States and European ports within the past few years, and especially within the past year, has been impressed by the increase in the number of sailing vessels, and especially by the marked increase in the sailing vessels to and from Mediterranean ports. It has been announced that the White Star Line has inaugurated a new service between the Mediterranean ports and the United States, and the Cunard Line has entered into competition for the steerage traffic from southern Europe and northern Africa and Asia and has closed a contract with the Austro-Hungarian Government by which the Cunard ships are guaranteed 30,000 immigrants from Austria-Hungary every year. Complaint was made against this contract, and it has since been modified. A new line of steamers has been established between Odessa and New York. The Austro-American steamers, which formerly plied as cargo boats between Trieste and Central America, have been transferred to run as passenger ships between Trieste and New York. The number of Mediterranean vessels of the Hamburg-American, North German Lloyd, and other companies has been largely increased. This shows a very large growth in the steerage passenger traffic from southern and eastern Europe and from Asia. The increase in the number of steamship agents all over eastern Europe, northern Africa, and Asia Minor likewise means increased immigration.

The last report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration (pp. 109 and 110) says:

> A change in the source of immigration, it will be seen, however, commenced about 1882, and has assumed enormous proportions during the past eight years, until now 70 per cent of our immigration comes from Slavic and Iberic countries of southern and eastern Europe, 700,000 having arrived from those countries during the past year, among whom were great numbers of illiterate aliens of different races, customs, and standards.

Further on he says:

> With the continuance of present conditions, it will be seen, the time will come when the new element, containing 70 per cent from southeastern Europe, will outnumber the old, which eventually can hardly mean less than a changed nationality.

The Commissioner-General of Immigration says also in his report:

> What will be the effect if the present phenomenal immigration continues, is a question that is constantly being asked. With regard more particulary to quantity, the question may be answered by the following illustration: China proper is the thickly populated portion of the Chinese Empire and is the country popularly thought of as practically representing the limit of density of population. At the present rate of immigration, say 1,000,000 per annum, and the present rate of natural increase (14.66 per cent per decade) the United States would reach the density of China proper in about four generations, or, more particularly, in one hundred and thirty-six years, at which time we would have a population of 950,000,000. This is in no sense an estimate of future population; it is simply an answer to the mathematical problem as to how long it will take to reach a density of population equal to the estimated density of China proper, with an annual immigration of 1,000,000, at the present rate of natural increase, and represents the present pace.

Mr. Jefferson, in his notes on Virginia, in speaking of the question of immigration—and the immigration that came at that time was of the same blood and stock as the American people—said:

> The present desire of America is to produce a rapid population by as great importation of foreigners as possible, but is this founded in good policy? Are there no inconveniences to be thrown into the scale against the advantages expected from the multiplication of numbers by the importation of foreigners? It is for the happiness of those united in society to harmonize as much as possible in matters which they must of necessity transact together. Civil government being the sole object of forming societies, its administration must be conducted by common consent.
> Every species of government has its specific principles. Ours perhaps are more peculiar than any other in the universe. It is a composition of the freest principles of the English constitution with others derived from natural right and reason. To this nothing can be more opposed than the maxims of absolute monarchies; yet from such we expect the greatest number of immigrants. They will bring with them the principles of the government they have imbibed in early youth, or, if able to throw them off, it will be in exchange for an unbounded licentiousness, passing, as is usual, from one extreme to another. It would be a miracle with them to stop precisely at the point of temperate liberty.

There is another view of the question of immigration, which was suggested to me by an editorial in the Washington Post of yesterday, May 21, which is as follows:

> To put it plainly, the Republican party has practically barred out most of the products of foreign labor, and at the same time has tempted European workingmen with wages that, to them, are "beyond the dreams of avarice." In addition to these influences, our manufacturers, protected by tariff bars, are taking bread out of the mouths of European workingmen at home by selling their products abroad at prices far below those which our own people are compelled to pay, and so low that even European cheap labor can not compete with them.

Mr. President, it is a common statement that the cardinal principle of the Republican party is protection to American industries and American labor, yet the American laborer is to-day confronted with the proposition that he has to pay protection prices for everything he buys, while his labor, which is the only thing he has to sell with which to buy the necessaries of life, is daily in danger of depreciation or absolute loss because labor is not sufficiently protected as against undesirable immigrants who are almost daily being dumped on our shores by thousands.

I shall not, however, discuss this subject further. To my mind it is self-evident that tariff rates should be reduced and immigration restricted.

Mr. President, I have tried to present the abuses of our present system of immigration, and now it is in order for me to suggest what I regard as proper legislation to be enacted at the present time. Before I do this, I wish to say immigration legislation in the United States has been the slow growth of years of study and investigation on the part of Congress and of Government officials.

I believe the act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, approved in 1903, is a good law. It is being enforced by the Commissioner-General of Immigration in a way that is satisfactory to the country. I think he is a faithful and an efficient officer.

Existing immigration laws, as far as they extend, are good and appropriate, but they are often violated. All agree that our laws are wise in excluding such classes as idiots and insane persons, epileptics, paupers, persons likely to become a public charge, professional beggars, persons afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease, persons who have been convicted of a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, polygamists, anarchists, prostitutes, but the time has arrived when the restrictions should be extended.

I shall not consume the time of the Senate by referring in detail to all matters presented in the pending bill, but I shall refer to the important additions now proposed to existing immigration laws, which were in the bill introduced by me and which are embraced in the pending bill.

The first addition is known as the head-tax amendment. A head tax of 50 cents on every immigrant was imposed by act of Congress in 1882, which was afterwards raised to $1, and under the act of March 3, 1903, it was increased to $2. Under the pending bill it is provided that there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $5 for each and every passenger not a citizen of the United States, or of the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or of the Republic of Mexico, who shall come by steam, sail, or other vessel from any foreign port to any port within the United States, or by any railway or any other mode of transportation from foreign contiguous territory to the United States, and the money thus collected is required to be paid into the United States Treasury and shall constitute a permanent appropriation to be called the "immigrant fund," to be used under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to defray the expense of regulating immigration of aliens into the United States.

Mr. DRYDEN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. McCREARY. Certainly.

Mr. DRYDEN. On the basis of last year's immigration, it would amount to something over $5,000,000.

Mr. McCREARY. The number of immigrants who came to our country last year amounted to 1,026,000. The head tax was $2. It would be $2,000,000.

Mr. DRYDEN. The Senator did not quite understand my question. On the basis of last year's immigration, it would be $5,000,000.

Mr. McCREARY. You mean, if we have a similar number this year?

Mr. DRYDEN. That is another way of putting it.

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DRYDEN. Assuming the immigration is a million persons, of course the head tax would amount to $5,000,000.

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, sir; $5,000,000.

Mr. DRYDEN. Can the Senator tell us what proportion of the fund is expended in immigration expenses? I ask for information. I am not myself informed.

Mr. McCREARY. I will state to the Senator from New Jersey that the last amendment proposed by the committee, if it is agreed to, will require a considerable expenditure of money in order to enforce it. I expect to discuss that when I get to it in connection with immigration expenses, but I would rather, if it is agreeable to the Senator, discuss the amendments in regular order, as they appear in the bill.

Mr. DRYDEN. I do not wish to anticipate the Senator's discussion. I did not know he was coming to that point.

Mr. McCREARY. An increased head tax means a larger immigrant fund and more effective administration of existing laws and better care of immigrants. It helps also to keep the steerage passage rate to the United States at a figure which brings it somewhere near the rate to other countries to which immigrants are likely to go. The head tax is generally paid by the steamship companies, who, by their agents, solicit immigrants to come to our country. When warm steamship rivalry occurs the steerage rates may be dropped to $10, or even less, as they did in the summer of 1904, and such reductions bring a large influx of very poor and generally undesirable aliens, as was the case last year. The increased head tax also keeps the steerage passage above the level of pauper rates, and is one of the few practical methods of reducing or limiting the rush of undesirable immigrants. While the head tax would not prevent all undesirable immigrants from coming to our country, it would doubtless prevent many of the incompetent and undesirable immigrants from coming, and it is believed that it will deter shipment of paupers and criminals as has been done in violation of law with the connivance of certain authorities abroad, and for the purposes of aiding immigration ship companies.

In the pending bill the classes of aliens excluded from admission into the United States have been increased by excluding imbeciles and feeble-minded persons. The two classes just named are not in the act of 1903, and have never before been in any of our immigration laws. The act of March 3, 1903, which is the existing law, excludes idiots, but does not exclude imbeciles and feeble-minded persons. There are a good many immigrants who are certified by medical inspectors as being feeble-minded, and who should certainly be debarred by law. No distinction should be made between the idiotic and the feeble-minded. The latter are as undesirable an addition to our population as the former, and it is as injurious and as improper to add to the American race the children of feeble-minded parents as of idiotic parents. We should therefore exclude imbeciles and feeble-minded persons as well as idiots. The pending bill also excludes persons who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeons as being mentally or physically defective to an extent that will affect the ability of such alien to earn a living. That is a very important amendment, and one which I think will reach a very large class of immigrants who seek to come to our country.

Indeed, when we exclude imbeciles and feeble-minded persons, and when we exclude also those who are certified by the examining surgeon to be mentally or physically defective to an extent that will affect the ability of such alien to earn a living, we will exclude a large number.

Thousands of aliens are recorded annually as being mentally or physically so defective that their ability to earn a living is thereby interfered with, yet most of them have been admitted because there is no specific clause in our existing law which excludes them. The mental or physical condition of an immigrant is a matter of great importance both as regards his ability to earn a living and also the health of and future of his descendants. The aliens who are mentally or physically defective usually shun the country, where they will be required to perform manual labor, and crowd into the city tenements, where they contract and disseminate diseases. One of the great dangers to our country from alien immigrants is that a large class of immigrants have been coming to our country in the last few years whose physique is much below American standards. Our best insurance against race decadence is to be found in good laws, which will give us only honest, industrious, healthy, and fit immigrants who appreciate our institutions and who will, like the immigrants who came to our country for so many years, quickly assimilate with our customs, aspirations, and interests.

We pay especial attention in our country to improvement in the breeding of our live stock of every description, and it would be just as unreasonable to claim that we will not lower American standards by admitting to our country immigrants that are of lower standards than ours as it is to assert that the breeding of the thoroughbred Kentucky horses will not be injured by breeding them with Texas mustangs.

One of the most important provisions in the pending bill, and one that will accomplish great good, is that provision which makes it a misdemeanor for any person, company, partnership, or corporation in any manner whatever to prepay the transportation, or to in any way assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien into the United States in pursuance of an offer, solicitation, or agreement made previous to the importation of such alien to perform labor or service of any kind in the United States, and the transportation companies or owner or owners of vessels, or others engaged in transporting aliens into the United States, are not allowed directly or indirectly, either by writing, printing, or oral representations, to solicit or encourage the immigration of aliens into the United States, and transportation companies are only permitted to issue circulars or advertisements stating the sailings of their vessels and terms and facilities of transportation; and for a violation of the foregoing provisions any such transportation company and any owner or owners of vessels engaged in transporting aliens into the United States shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000 for each and every offense, or by imprisonment for a term of not less than three months nor more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and every master, agent, owner or consignee of any vessel who shall bring into the United States by vessel or otherwise any alien not duly admitted by an immigrant inspector, or not lawfully entitled to enter the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject to the same penalties as just stated.

One of the distressing results of our present immigration system is the large number of aliens who are denied admission after they have made their journey across the ocean. During the last year, according to the statement of Hon. Frank P. Sargent, United States Commissioner-General of Immigration, 11,879 immigrants were denied admission to our country out of over 1,000,000 that arrived, and were returned to the country whence they came. These persons were paupers, convicts, immoral characters, diseased persons, and persons who came in violation of the alien contract-labor law; and the United States Commissioner-General of Immigration also says:

> Of the number that were landed, there were many who were afterwards found to be undesirable and here in violation of law.

The immigration conference recently held at New York heartily indorsed the excellent method of reducing the number of the debarred aliens when it recommended that a fine be imposed on the steamship companies for each immigrant who is inspected and rejected in our country under existing law after arrival.

It is believed that the provisions of the pending bill to which I have referred will go very far toward forcing the steamship companies to cease their solicitation of immigrants, and cause thousands of undesirable or doubtful aliens, who otherwise could have been brought to our country in great numbers, to be debarred.

In this connection I wish to say the substitute of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] for the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is meritorious and seems to be unanimously indorsed. It provides that admission into the United States shall be denied to all immigrants over 16 years of age who can not read the English language or some other language.

The last section of the pending bill to which I refer is the section which was prepared with much care and which, I think, is needed by the people of all the States and Territories in the Union, and especially by the people in the Southern States. It is as follows:

> Authority is hereby given the Commissioner-General of Immigration to establish, under the direction and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, a division of information in the Bureau of Immigration. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall appoint a chief of such division and such clerical assistants as may be necessary. It shall be the duty of said division to promote a beneficial distribution of aliens admitted into the United States among the several States and Territories desiring immigration. Correspondence shall be had with the proper officials of the States and Territories, and said division shall gather from all available sources useful information regarding the resources, products, and physical characteristics of each State and Territory, the character of the climate and soil, the prices of lands, the routes of travel and cost of transportation, the opportunities of employment in skilled and unskilled occupations, the prevailing rates of wages, the cost of living, and all other information that may tend to aid aliens in selecting a place of residence, and shall publish such information in different languages and distribute the same among all admitted aliens at the immigrant stations of the United States and to such other persons and societies as may desire the same. When any State or Territory appoints and maintains at its own expense an agent to represent it at any of the immigrant stations of the United States, such agent shall, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, have access to aliens who have been admitted to the United States for the purposes of presenting, either orally or in writing, the special inducements offered by such State or Territory to aliens to settle therein; and the Commissioner-General of Immigration may, when practicable, provide space at the various immigrant stations for displays by such agents of the resources and products of their respective States and Territories. While on duty at any immigrant station, such agent shall be subject to all the regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, who, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may, for violation of any such regulations, deny to the agent guilty of such violation any of the privileges herein granted. The expense of carrying the provisions of this section into effect shall be paid out of the "immigrant fund."

I call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN] to that section of the proposed law which I have just read, and which relates to the question he asked me.

Mr. DRYDEN. I understand it is the view of the Senator from Kentucky that the increase in the fund created by the head tax is to be used to assist in the distribution of immigrants to different parts of the country. Is that the Senator's view?

Mr. MCCREARY. The view I have is that a large part of the immigrant fund will be necessary to carry out the requirements of the amendment proposed by the committee to the existing law, which I have just read.

The best class of immigrants generally know when they leave home where they expect to locate when they arrive in the United States. But a large number of immigrants who came to this country last year did not know when they started where they would locate. One object of this amendment is to obtain information in a proper way and furnish it to them. Also to promote a beneficial distribution of aliens among the several States and Territories desiring immigrants, and disseminate useful information regarding the resources, products, and physical characteristics of each State and Territory, the kind of climate and soil, the price of land, the route of travel and cost of transportation, and the rate of wages; and provide for the display by State agents at immigrant stations of the resources and products of their respective States.

The amendment is of great importance to the Southern States. The last report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration shows that very few immigrants found their way to the Southern States.

Last year 315,000 immigrants located in New York and 210,000 in Pennsylvania, and only 684 located in Kentucky and a less number in each of the States of Georgia, Arkansas, North Carolina, and South Carolina.

The Southern States need desirable immigrants; they want desirable immigrants; and the object of this amendment, which was reported unanimously from the Committee on Immigration, is to lay before immigrants when they come to this country the attractions of the various States and Territories, so that they may not be collected in the cities and in a few States.

It is not proposed to send immigrants to States that do not want them; it is not proposed to use any undue influence with immigrants; it is only proposed to lay before them the attractions of the various States and Territories, to show them how they may get there, what it will cost to get there, and how they can make an honest living after they have arrived in the various States and Territories.

When we look at the Congressional Directory and see the list of the names of the commissioners who are now engaged in assisting the Commissioner-General of Immigration at various points, we find that to-day there is a commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island, New York, one at Boston, one at Philadelphia, one at Baltimore, one at San Francisco, and there is not one on the southern coast.[a]

How do we propose to bring before the immigrants who come to this country the attractions, the desire for laborers, and the wages they may obtain unless we adopt the plan set forth in this amendment? Steamships that have been bringing immigrants to our country have been bringing them to the ports which I have named, and there seems to have been no effort to bring immigrants to the Southern States. The immigration law should be so broadened as to bring before the minds of immigrants when they come to this country the fact that there are other States besides New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and New Jersey. The time has come when there should be one commissioner of immigration, at least, in the Southern States, for, if the list in the Congressional Directory, is correct, there is not to-day a solitary commissioner of immigration at any southern port. They are all at northern ports.

I noticed a few days ago that a vessel arrived in New Orleans from Palermo with 630 Italian immigrants, who, after due inspection, took trains to various points in Louisiana, Alabama, Texas, and Mississippi, showing that there is beginning now among the better class of immigrants to be a desire to go to the Southern States.

The South needs more labor and can give employment to a large number of worthy immigrants; but to secure these organization is necessary and intelligent selection of immigrants who are adapted to the climate and the occupation will be required.

In addition, the various States which have immigration

[a] An amendment was offered by Mr. MCCREARY, authorizing the appointment of an immigration commissioner, to be located at New Orleans, La.; which was agreed to.

bureaus should cooperate, and the States which have no immigration bureaus or immigration agents should enact such legislation as may seem desirable and proper after this law is enacted.

There has been a great change in the labor of the South in the last twenty years, especially in the production of cotton. Very few persons are aware of the great change that has occurred in the cotton States so far as the production of cotton is concerned.

In 1885, twenty years ago, 10 per cent of the cotton crop only was produced by white labor.

Between 8,000,000 and 9,000,000 bales of cotton were produced in 1885.

In 1904, which was the year when the South made the largest number of bales of cotton ever produced, reaching nearly 14,000,000 bales, the census report issued by Director North shows that 40 per cent of the cotton that year was produced by white labor.

This increase in twenty years shows that white labor in the South now produces four times as much cotton as was produced just twenty years before. The time is not far distant when white labor will produce more than half the cotton, and perhaps before a great while three-fourths of the cotton of the Southern States.

Mr. President, when we remember that 45,000 immigrants landed at Ellis Island, New York, in one week last month, and the outlook indicates that the rest of the spring and the coming summer will see no diminution of this rate of almost 7,000 immigrants per day, and when the United States Commissioner-General of Immigration asserts that he believes the total number of arrivals for the current year will exceed that for last year, it is clear that just and speedy and proper action should be taken by Congress.

I hope the pending bill will pass, and that immigration to our country will be so restricted as to keep out undesirable immigrants and encourage desirable immigrants to come to our country, and that American wage-earners, whether in the field, in the factory, or in the mines, will be protected against pauper labor, and that the racial standards will not degenerate in any part of our country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to renew the suggestion which I made before the Senator from Kentucky took the floor, that the unanimous consent asked by the Senator from Vermont for disposing of the amendments of the committee be agreed to. The unanimous consent asked was that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendment and the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? There is no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I dislike very much to delay action upon the bill, but I should like to make a few remarks on it, and I will ask the kind indulgence of the Senate for a brief time.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator yield to me to have an amendment read that I propose to offer?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly; I yield for that purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. —. That every transportation company or owner or owners of vessels or others engaged in the transportation of aliens into the United States shall file with the Commissioner of Immigration a statement of the number, character, tonnage, and cubic space available and used for immigrant passengers of each and every vessel thus employed in the transportation of aliens, and no transportation company, owner or owners of vessels, or others failing to file such statement shall be permitted to land alien passengers at any port of the United States.

SEC. —. That not more than one passenger to every foot of cubic space available and used for the carriage of immigrant passengers shall be transported on any such vessels.

SEC. —. That the Commissioner of Immigration is authorized to appoint an inspector, who shall be carried on every vessel thus engaged in the transportation of aliens into the United States, and such inspector shall be charged with the duty of making and enforcing such sanitary regulations as he may deem necessary for the health of the alien immigrants on board such vessels.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will lie on the table.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, on the 6th day of last February the Senator from Vermont introduced a bill, known as Senate bill 4172, having for its object "to establish a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States." Subsequently, on the 14th day of February, the same Senator introduced a bill, known as Senate bill No. 4403, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903.

These bills present for the consideration of Congress two subjects of far-reaching importance to the American people, as to which I desire to submit some observations and to suggest on each subject—namely, that of immigration and naturalization—certain remedies that appeal to me as being absolutely necessary and practicable. I am not prepared to advocate the bills referred to in their entirety, but have no hesitancy in saying that in their general aim and intent they seek to reach a subject and afford a remedy that is second in importance to but few of the great issues that are now attracting universal attention. A moment's reflection upon the phenomenal growth of our own country, its almost boundless wealth, its vast domain, and the freedom and independence associated with its citizenship will quickly impress the thoughtful mind with the importance of placing every safeguard not only around the right to American citizenship, but upon the privilege of admission to our country.

A careful consideration of the class of immigrants being admitted into this country, the vast throng that annually seeks these shores, compels the conviction that the laws, rules, and regulations on the subject of immigration and naturalization are entirely inadequate to meet the situation and are far short of being effective, having a proper regard for our own welfare.

In the earlier days of the Republic the number of persons seeking admission into the United States was infinitesimal compared with the present. From the year 1776 down to the year 1820 it is estimated that there were only 250,000 immigrants admitted to this country, while from 1820 to 1895 the number increased to 22,931,983, and in the last year, 1905, reached the enormous figures of 1,026,499, largely in excess of the number of inhabitants of some of our important States, and more than the population of the great and rich State that I have the honor in part to represent on this floor. The admission of immigrants up to the year 1845 was comparatively small, never exceeding 100,000 annually, with the exception of that year (1845), and, as a rule, greatly below that figure. Since 1845 it has fluctuated greatly, depending largely upon the prosperity of the country.

In recent years there has been a steady increase up to three-quarters of a million annually four years ago and the round million last year. These figures speak more eloquently than anything that can be said, and must admonish every patriotic person of the urgent necessity for legislation to the end that this enormous annual influx into our body politic of an element, in most instances, unused and unsuited to our institutions, and in many respects unfriendly to the same, may be kept within reasonable bounds. These immigrants come from well-nigh every part of the habitable globe, are of nearly every nationality, are generally densely ignorant, and in nearly every instance from countries whose institutions and form of government unsuit them for life under our popular form of government. In view of the constant increase of this population and the great benefits derived by them in leaving their own lands and coming here, it would be folly to suppose for a moment that there will under existing conditions be any diminution of the same. On the contrary, every sign points to the steady increase, and this increase, too, from the most undesirable, the worst populations of the Old World. The duty of the hour, in my humble opinion, is to prevent the pollution of our body politic by the injection of this deadly virus; and how can we do this unless we remove the cause—by placing limitations and restrictions upon the wholesale admission of foreigners, so that the undesirable immigrants may be kept out. The constant stream of these people to our country reminds us of Tennyson's brook—it runs on forever—and unless we take some radical action to prevent it, the time will come when it will burst all about us and overwhelm us in the flood.

When we contemplate the class of immigrants that are now flooding this country and reflect upon their deterioration, as compared with those who came in former years, we see at a glance the great danger to which our institutions are exposed, and I trust that I may be pardoned for making a comparison as to this. The number of immigrants from Germany has been within the last quarter of a century and is still steadily declining and those from Italy steadily increasing. The same may be said as to Russia and Austria-Hungary. In 1881 there were 15,401 immigrants from Italy, against 210,485 Germans, while in 1905 there were admitted 221,470 Italians and only 40,574 Germans. During the last six years the tide of German immigrants has fallen to as low as 18,507 annually, while that from Italy during the same period has never dropped below the 100,000 mark and in the year 1900 soared up to the enormous figure of 230,622. When one reflects upon the value of the material development of this country and compares his works average German immigrant and the part he has taken in the with those of the average Italian, having in view the great increase of the latter, he can but have serious apprehension and forebodings for the future.

Much that has been said as to the Italian immigrant applies with equal force to those from Austria-Hungary and Russia. In 1895, 275,693 immigrants were admitted from the first-named country and 184,897 from the latter. Of those from Austria-Hungary, more than 50,000 were Poles, nearly that number Magyars, and a large number were Bohemians. Of those from Russia, about a fourth of the entire number were Poles, thus forming about as undesirable a class of immigrants as could well be imagined. Another feature serious to contemplate in connection with this influx of immigrants is the large percentage of illiterates. The increase in this respect is due, doubtless, to the change in the countries from which the majority of the immigrants now come. But however this may be, it nevertheless exists and is undesirable in the extreme. An illustration may be given in the case of the Italian immigrants. Last year 185,445 of them were from southern Italy and 56 per cent of them were illiterate. The percentage of ignorance in the case of the immigrants from Austria-Hungary and Russia was not quite so high, but nevertheless alarming.

In nothing that has been said has it been my purpose to harshly criticise any of the unfortunates who seek relief by coming to our country with a view of bettering their condition. We all recognize how much we owe to the worthy immigrant who settles in our midst, and what a debt of obligation we particularly owe to the English, Irish, German, Swede, Norwegian, Finn, and others who have done so much to develop our country in the past and who now form a part and parcel of it, standing true and loyal to our institutions in peace and in war. They have a common interest with us in preventing the population of our Government from being polluted with this undesirable, unsuited, and illiterate class.

We who are in part charged with the responsibility of government owe this to our fellow-countrymen, and more particularly to those with whom this class comes in competition, namely, our small tradesmen and laboring people. They should not be subjected to competition with this shiftless class. The American laboring man and wage-earner is among those who should never be lost sight of in considering this problem. They make up the bone and sinew of the land. Their labor gives vitality to it. They are law-abiding, worthy, and intelligent, and have deservedly earned for themselves the affection and good will of their fellow-countrymen. And they and their children have the right to expect the Government, which they support, love, and help to maintain, to do all in its power to add to their opportunities in life; to increase their chances of earning a livelihood and to make life happy and congenial rather than to put stumbling blocks in their path. Anything that tends to put them in competition with a degraded class, or with others who, by reason of their lack of thrift and desire for respectability and decency, can exist under circumstances and conditions not conducive to the public good, would be little short of criminal.

For the majority of these immigrants that come to our country and compete with our honest laboring people are those who, in their native land, receive what would be equivalent in our money to not more than 25 to 50 cents for a day's work of twelve or fourteen hours. When they see either by the public press or by letters from this country that our laborers for ten hours' work are receiving from $1.50 to $2 a day for ordinary labor, the mighty rush sets in, and they are willing to immigrate here and work for a dollar per day, which is a great injustice to our home people.

I have stood upon the dock at Naples, Italy, and seen as many as three large ocean-going steamers leave with emigrants for America, not one of whom could speak our language, who had only as much of this world's goods as could be carried in an ordinary gunny sack, and who bore upon their countenances every indication of dissipation. What is true in this regard of the immigrants from Naples is equally true of many other ports. They are made up of the very lowest classes of other countries. Mr. President, I do not mean to say that all immigrants are of this class, but I do unhesitatingly state that a very great majority of them are. The time has come for us to enact laws not only to protect our own citizens from such conditions, but that will compel other countries to keep at home their disreputable subjects, which their conditions have fostered.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield with pleasure to my friend from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia state what, if any, restrictions were placed by the steamship companies upon the billing of this vast mass of humanity upon our shores? Did they conduct any inspection or endeavor in any manner to ascertain whether the immigrants were fit or proper persons to be admitted to our country and to have the benefit of our laws?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Montana, I will say that in the immense building to which I have referred, where those immigrants congregated before going aboard the steamer, they have, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] noted this morning, in conformity with an arrangement with the Italian Government, a system of inspection; but as a casual observer, standing in their midst and seeing go forth this great throng to this country, it did not appear to me an inspection of a very thorough character.

The evil effects of such an element among us are made evident in various ways; among others, in the large percentage of aliens who make up the inmates of our penal and charitable institutions, and who are largely, if not entirely, responsible for the serious violence and disorder constantly occurring in sections largely occupied by them in this country, from which places we continually see evidence of antagonism to government and hatred of law and order, involving destruction of life and property, such as are made manifest by the anarchists of Germany, the nihilists of Russia, and the communists of France. In this connection it may be stated as a fact not unworthy of note that in the portions of this country where we are free from this undesirable class of immigrants such things as serious outbreaks and defiance of law and order are comparatively unknown, and it may further be said, without fear of successful contradiction, that where such disturbances have occurred they may be traced to the vicious examples thus set them by the aliens.

But, Mr. President, the objections to the indiscriminate admission, as at present, of immigrants to this country are so manifold that they need not be detailed, and the bad effect upon the people of our land is so apparent as to be readily observed. The detrimental effect upon our social, religious, and moral conditions can not be calculated, nor can one well estimate the far-reaching evil effect that will be sustained in the way of disease, pauperism, vice, and crime from the existing conditions.

Mr. President, much that has been said on the subject of immigration bears directly upon the subject of naturalization also. The two subjects are so identified that they can well be considered together in the same bill and discussed at the same time. The benefits derived from living in a country such as ours is, in itself, a blessing that all might well crave, no matter from what part of the habitable globe the immigrant may come. When it is recognized, as it is to-day everywhere, what the right of American citizenship implies and the rich heritage that an American-born boy has in that respect, we, at least, by the laws passed by the Congress of the United States, should not seek to bring this citizenship into disrepute at home or abroad, but, on the contrary, should ever be willing to protect and elevate it. We annually spend millions and millions of dollars upon our public and private educational institutions looking to the fitting of our people to properly discharge the obligations of government and enjoy its blessings, and our sons are required to wait until the year of maturity before they can exercise the elective franchise. They have not only, therefore, the full opportunity of education afforded to all classes and races, but they are imbued from childhood with full knowledge of our form of government and our institutions; and it is a fact that the average American boy knows more of our institutions and form of government than a foreign adult who has resided here for ten years. Yet the foreigner, no matter who he is, has but to come and knock at the door of the naturalization office, and even if he complies with the law he has only to live in this country five years before he can vote.

But it is within the knowledge of us all that with the use of the fraudulent practices prevailing in many places, to the disgrace of the country be it said, throngs of them are immediately made full-fledged American citizens and carried to the polls to vote, not for the man of their choice (for they have no choice), but simply for the manipulator who has them in charge. The immigrant does not have to speak our language; he does not have to possess any educational advantages or any means, and he thus helps to swell the election returns, which, in our cities particularly, most frequently are against good government and the intelligence and worth of the community. Great political machines and powerful organizations thrive and exist and have their being in some of our larger cities, and as a result make and unmake rulers, and at times control the political destinies of the nation entirely through the manipulation of this class of immigrants. That such a condition as this should exist in this country is shocking to our civilization, and it ought not to remain for a moment longer. That it is true, however, is well known and recognized, and within a period of two years, it appears from a recent report of a special attorney appointed by the Department of Justice, that in the city of New York, out of 791 criminal complaints filed, 685 convictions were had. It also appears that through civil proceedings 1,916 fraudulent certificates of naturalization were canceled, and it was reported that these were but a small fraction of the total number of frauds that had been committed. Every possible safeguard should be thrown around the admission to citizenship of the immigrant after he arrives, as well to the end that he may not exercise the right of suffrage fraudulently as that he may be competent to understand when he does so, and also that he may not go abroad and there fraudulently avail himself of the rights of citizenship in this country. The following report of the Commissioners on Naturalization, recently made to the President of the United States, will be interesting on this point:

The commanding position assumed by the United States among the great powers of the world, especially since the Spanish war, has induced many aliens resident abroad to secure naturalization certificates from the courts of this country by false personation or perjury, for the sole purpose of engaging in unlawful pursuits or practices in their native country under the protection afforded them by such alleged citizenship. In the same way certificates have been procured in the name of alien criminals resident abroad or of aliens who for some reason would be debarred from entrance into the United States, and by the possession of which certificates they are assured of entrance into this country. Many alleged citizens of the United States, principally Syrians, resident in Hayti and Santo Domingo, have procured certificates for the sole purpose of escaping local taxation and to invoke the protection of the United States in any internal trouble arising in those countries.

This report clearly reveals the tricks resorted to in fraud of our citizenship. I know personally, Mr. President, something as to the accuracy of this statement of the commissioners. In my travels abroad—and I have of late spent considerable time in foreign countries—I have had brought to my attention the fact that there are many subjects who come to America for no other purpose than to take out naturalization papers, return to their homes, and claim the protection of the American Government through its consuls and judicial tribunals whenever they are caught in the act of wrongdoing. For instance, I remember that three years ago when I was in Jerusalem, I was informed by the consul-general that the greatest trouble he had was with citizens of that place who had come to the United States, taken out naturalization papers, become citizens of this country, and then returned there, and who, upon getting into trouble, claimed the protection of American citizenship. Many of them were not able to speak one single word of English and knew nothing whatever of our institutions, or had no possible interest in the same, except in so far as it afforded them relief and protection. That upon the presentation of the evidence that they were American citizens, he would have to go into the courts, take up their cases and defend them. On this same tour I took a two days' drive out from Naples, Italy, stopping overnight in a village. There I found a hotel kept by an Italian who had been a cook in Philadelphia, and who had saved enough money to go back home and build a hotel, which he was then conducting. He informed me that he had taken out papers and was a full American citizen, but never expected to come back here, and had only come to America for the purpose of making enough money to establish his business and become an American citizen so he could claim the protection of our Government when he returned to his native land.

I noticed the same evening that a great many houses in this village were minus windows and doors, and asked my host the cause of it. He replied, "Well, we are a city here of possibly 5,000 inhabitants, but at present we have, possibly, not more than 3,000. The balance are in America. They take out the windows and doors and then these houses are reported to the Government as abandoned, so as to save taxes." He said that many of the people remained in America long enough to earn sufficient money and then they would come back, as he had done. I learned from him that another important point is that they become citizens of the United States while over here, and it saves them a great deal of trouble and expense when they go back to Italy and reside there, not as Italians, but as American citizens. Then I said, "They take out naturalization papers and become citizens of the United States simply to defraud and evade the laws of their own country." He replied that this was true to a large extent. A simple reference to these conditions and recital of the facts narrated will, I am sure, more strongly present the necessity for immediate relief and remedy from the evils of existing conditions than anything that I can possibly say. There will naturally arise differences as to the details in providing for the desired relief, but that the same should be afforded, and that there is the utmost urgency therefor, there can be no doubt. This, in my humble judgment, calls for far more speedy action than many of the questions that are to-day largely occupying the public mind and receiving attention at our hands. I do not profess to possess superior knowledge in reference to either of the subjects involved, but trust that I may be pardoned for making as to each several suggestions which occur to me as pertinent and material and that will tend, at least in part, to lesson the evils of which the nation complains.

As to immigration:

1. I would provide by law that only persons should be admitted at all to whom our consular officers at the place of departure, or at the place nearest the immigrant's home, would give a certificate showing that he had furnished evidence satisfying him of the standing of the prospective immigrant at his home, so that he would not make an undesirable citizen of our country.

2. That such prospective immigrant should particularly furnish to the consul evidence of the fact that he was of good moral character, had not been convicted of crime, and was such a person, by reason of health and strength, that neither he nor his family would likely become a charge upon the country.

3. That such immigrant should make affidavit that it was his bona fide purpose to immigrate to this country with a view of becoming a citizen thereof, and that he would not return to his home, with a view of residing there, within a period of five years.

4. Where such immigrant is a man of family, the certificate herein provided for should be sufficient to provide for the admission of his wife and children under 18 years of age, but for all children above 18 a separate affidavit should be furnished.

5. Our consuls should, in issuing certificates to families, limit them to such families as have a male parent or two sons above the age of 16 years, upon whom the mother or wife, as the case may be, and the children could depend for support.

6. Certificates should not issue at all to persons over the age of 60 years.

7. That the immigration officers in this country should only admit such persons as are contemplated by and hold the certificates hereinbefore provided for.

8. Our immigration officers in this country should be required to keep a record of all immigrants coming to this country holding such certificates, the same to show a full description of the immigrant, including his age, appearance, height, weight, color of hair and eyes, physical marks, and anything else that would tend to show the identity of the person, together with the date of his admission. The certificate issued by the consul abroad should be filed as a part of the public record of the immigration office in this country, showing the authority for making such entry.

9. Our immigration officers should furnish a certificate showing this entry and record, either to the immigrant himself or to any persons in his behalf, to be used, among other things, in connection with his application for naturalization, if he should make application for such.

10. Each immigrant should pay to the consul abroad a fee of $2 in American money for the certificate, such fee to be accounted for by the consul in settlement with the Government of his country, and a fee of $3 to the immigration officer in this country, to be accounted for in the same way.

11. Each immigrant should have $50 upon his admission into this country, as evidence of the fact that he will not become a charge upon the country.

As to naturalization, around the right to naturalization I would throw such safeguards as would not only tend to elevate those seeking to secure the right of suffrage, but, moreover, would add every possible requirement that would tend to prevent the practice of fraud in connection therewith. Among other things, I would suggest:

1. That those seeking naturalization should be able to write the English language and to intelligently speak the English language.

2. That five years' residence should be required of immigrants coming into this country before having the right to make a preliminary declaration of intention to become a citizen of this country.

3. That ten years' residence should be required before securing the right of citizenship.

4. That the preliminary application for admission to citizenship should be made at least two years before the granting of the permanent certificate; but in the case of minors admitted under the age of 18 years no preliminary declaration should be required, but they must have resided in this country continuously for the prescribed ten years.

5. That persons seeking to be naturalized should reside in the State in which they seek naturalization at least one year prior to the granting of the same, and in the county, city, or town in which they seek such naturalization at least three months prior thereto; residence, however, anywhere in the United States to be computed in making up the full time limit of ten years as prescribed above.

6. Each applicant seeking admission should be required to produce before the court hearing his final application for admission to citizenship a certificate from the immigration officer at the port at which he entered showing the date of his admission to the country and a full copy of the record entry made at the time of his admission, showing his description and identity as the person he represents himself to be; and he should also be required, by at least two witnesses, to prove his residence within the State, city, county, or town in which the application is made for the period above specified, that he is a law-abiding citizen, of good moral character, attached to our institutions, and has forever renounced all allegiance to all foreign powers, and especially the one of which he has formerly been a subject.

7. That jurisdiction to grant certificates of naturalization should be limited to the circuit and district courts of the United States exclusively in cities and towns where such courts are held, and in places where there are no Federal courts then in the courts of record of general jurisdiction in the city, town, or county wherein the applicant resides.

8. That all applications for naturalization should be heard in open court, and upon the admission to citizenship that fact should be certified to the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, at Washington, D. C., under the seal of the court, embodying as a part of the record a copy of the certificate filed by the applicant of his admission to the country.

9. That no certificate of naturalization should be granted by any court, State or Federal, within sixty days of any Federal, State, county, city, or town election.

10. That the applicant for naturalization should pay all costs incident to the same, including the cost of the certificate, also the cost of the papers required to be certified to the Department at Washington, together with a fee of $1, to pay for recording such certificate of citizenship in the Department.

11. That the Government, through its accredited representatives, should have the right to appear and oppose the awarding of the certificate of naturalization, and appeal from the order granting the same should be allowed to the Government, and an order rejecting the same should be appealable by the applicant; and that the Government should have the right to move to cancel and vacate certificates of naturalization believed to have been improperly or fraudulently secured.

12. That all certificates of naturalization should be vacated and annulled upon the holder thereof returning permanently to his native country after remaining therein for a period exceeding two years.

13. That heavy fines and punishments should be prescribed for all violations of the naturalization laws as well on the part of the person seeking naturalization as of persons aiding and abetting, directly or indirectly, in connection therewith.

These are some suggestions that present themselves to me as tending somewhat to remedy the complaints justly made against the present system, and I shall be more than content if, by anything that I may have said or suggested, material assistance will be rendered in this great and important task which so urgently calls for prompt and vigorous action on our part.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Immigration with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 2, page 2, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" in line 6, after the word "passengers," to insert "not a citizen of the United States, or of the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or of the Republic of Mexico;" and in line 10, before the word "other," to insert "any;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 19, 20, and 25 of said act be amended so as to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $5 for each and every passenger not a citizen of the United States or of the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or of the Republic of Mexico who shall come by steam, sail, or other vessel from any foreign port to any port within the United States, or by any railway or any other mode of transportation from foreign contiguous territory to the United States, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 12, after the words "United States," to strike out:

Unless it shall be made to appear that such passenger is a citizen of the United States, or of the Republic of Cuba, or is returning overland from foreign contiguous territory to resume a domicile already acquired in the United States, or has for a year prior to such coming been a domiciled resident of Newfoundland, the Dominion of Canada, or the Republic of Mexico, or that such passenger is a duly accredited official of a foreign government entering the United States from foreign contiguous territory upon the business of the government by which he is accredited.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I am called out of the Chamber, and will ask the Senator from Vermont if he will allow me to offer an amendment on page 3?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. We have not reached that point yet. I will say to the Senator, however, that I will offer the amendment if he desires to leave the Chamber.

Mr. FRYE. I am entirely willing to leave it to the Senator.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to ask a question of the Senator in charge of the bill concerning the amendment on page 2. The amendment to which I desire to direct attention reads as follows:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $5 for each and every passenger not a citizen of the United States or of the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or of the Republic of Mexico.

Will the Senator permit me to ask if he understands that a citizen of Porto Rico or of the Philippines would be compelled to pay $5 tax on coming into this country?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If he is a citizen of the United States, I do not think he would.

Mr. CARTER. Filipinos are not citizens of the United States, as I understand, and I think the people of Porto Rico have only a qualified citizenship.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me that they ought both to be included in the amendment. They are not citizens of the United States under existing law.

Mr. CARTER. That is true.

Mr. FORAKER. There is a bill pending in relation to this matter, but I have no objection to having a provision inserted in this bill covering that case. Unless it is inserted, I should like to have the proviso——

Mr. CARTER. Then I move, after the words "United States" in the amendment of the committee, to insert "or of any of its possessions who are not prohibited from entering the United States by existing law."

Mr. LODGE. There is no need of the last part of that.

Mr. CARTER. There are certain persons in our possessions who are prohibited from entering the United States—the Chinese, for instance—and it is essential that this act be not in conflict with the Chinese-exclusion act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee amendment has been agreed to; but in the absence of objection, the Chair will regard it as open to amendment. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana to the committee amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the words "United States," in the amendment of the committee, on page 2, line 6, it is proposed to insert "or of any of its possessions who are not prohibited from entering the United States by existing law."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 2, on page 3, line 14, after the word "other," to insert "conveyance or;" and in line 17, after the word "other," to insert the words "conveyances or;" so as to read:

The duty imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessel or other conveyance or vehicle which shall bring such aliens to ports or places in the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessels, or other conveyances or vehicles, and the payment of such duty may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I offer an amendment, in line 20 on page 3, after the word "upon."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that, under the unanimous-consent agreement, the bill is being read now for the consideration of committee amendments.

Mr. FRYE. I understand that, but the Senator in charge of the bill authorized me to offer the amendment at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was not aware of that.

Mr. FRYE. After the word "upon," in section 2, on page 3, line 20, I move to insert "aliens in transit through the United States nor upon."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Maine if the amendment ought not to read "continuous transit?"

Mr. FRYE. No; I think not, because the word "continuous" is below, and it is not continuous transit, for they change from the steamer to the railroad. They take the Grand Trunk Railroad. Such a provision is in the existing law.

Mr. LODGE. I know it is the existing law, but as it now stands it is open to a great deal of abuse. If they land and take the railroad at once and go to Canada, which is the point in question, that is all very well; but if they are landed on that proposition, and then do not go to Canada, they simply escape, or the company escapes.

Mr. FRYE. A very large majority of them have their fares paid through to Canada.

Mr. LODGE. I know that, but inserting the word "continuous" could not possibly do any injustice. It would simply provide that they should be bona fide passengers in continuous transit.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know that I object to that. I accept the modification.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 20, after the word "upon," it is proposed to insert "aliens in continuous transit through the United States, nor upon."

Mr. PATTERSON. Let the clause as proposed to be amended be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The head tax herein provided for shall not be levied upon aliens in continuous transit through the United States, nor upon aliens passing in continuous transit from one point in foreign contiguous territory through the United States to another point in foreign contiguous territory, nor upon aliens who have once been admitted into the United States and have paid the head tax who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 4, line 1, after the word "territory," to insert:

Nor upon duly accredited officials of foreign governments who shall enter the United States from foreign contiguous territory upon the business of the governments to which they are accredited.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That amendment should be amended. I move to amend it by adding to the amendment the matter which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "accredited," at the end of the committee amendment, it is proposed to insert:

Nor upon the alien passengers who have been residents of the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, or of the Republic of Mexico for at least one year prior to their coming to the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont why he limits it to those traveling from "foreign contiguous territory?" Why not say "from any foreign country?"

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not think I understood the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. MALLORY. I did not catch what the Senator from Vermont said.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I did not quite understand the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. MALLORY. I want to know why in the proposed amendment there is inserted the word "contiguous," so as to read "from foreign contiguous territory." Suppose they enter from a foreign country that is not contiguous?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The purpose, I suppose, has been this: On the north we have Canada and on the south we have Mexico. Persons are constantly passing back and forth from Canada into the United States. Various railroads run back and forth. We have had a good deal of trouble in determining who in Canada should be permitted to come in without the payment of a head tax. We have discussed the question whether it should be a citizen of Canada, and when we came to find who were citizens of Canada we found ourselves in trouble.

Mr. MALLORY. This amendment applies to officials.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Oh!

Mr. MALLORY. It is the amendment at the top of page 4.

Nor upon duly accredited officials of foreign governments who shall enter the United States from foreign contiguous territory upon the business of the governments to which they are accredited.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I misunderstood the Senator's inquiry. I know no reason why it should not apply to all, whether they come from contiguous territory or not.

Mr. MALLORY. I move to strike out the word "contiguous."

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, may it not be that this refers to accredited officials simply passing through the United States to other countries; and if that is the case, why not confine it to those who enter the United States from contiguous territory?

Mr. LODGE. That is the reason why it was inserted, as I understood. Of course the representatives of foreign governments to this country, no matter where they may come from, are admitted without restriction.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is, to this country.

Mr. LODGE. To this country; whether they come from foreign contiguous territory or direct from abroad.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; or from Canada, if they intend to go to Mexico——

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. They could pass through.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I understood.

Mr. PATTERSON. But why, unless there is some necessity, where they come to this country on a steamship line, when it is not necessary for them to pass through this country to go to any other country, should not the head tax be levied? I think the language is well enough.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If the Senator will allow me, as a matter of practice the steamship companies plying between the United States and Europe invariably pay the head tax.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. And they will pay it upon an ambassador as well as upon anybody else. This applies to cases where officials of foreign governments are coming into our territory from contiguous territory, where there is no steamship company to pay it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Therefore I think the language is eminently correct.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It seems to me so.

Mr. PATTERSON. It meets the situation just as the committee had it in mind.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. This is what the committee had in mind.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not think the amendment ought to prevail.

Mr. MALLORY. How does that affect the case of a diplomat or consul going from Germany to Japan, passing through the United States?

Mr. LODGE. Those are the cases, I suppose, which it is intended to cover. Oh! You mean coming direct from Germany?

Mr. MALLORY. Passing through the United States. Germany is not contiguous to the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Those are covered by the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. LODGE. Those are covered by the general law.

Mr. PATTERSON. I understand that the head tax in such cases is now paid by the steamship companies.

Mr. MALLORY. I was not aware of that.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Vermont something of the scope of this provision. This is to apply to immigrants, as I understand, and to regulate immigration. Is it the law or intended to be the law that if some gentleman and his wife come from England, to sojourn two weeks in this country, they must pay this tax, or if a lawyer comes to deliver an address to the American Bar Association, he must pay the tax?

Mr. LODGE. It is the existing law.

Mr. SPOONER. That he must go to Ellis Island and pay this tax?

Mr. LODGE. It is the existing law. It does not, of course, include persons who are not in the nature of immigrants.

Mr. SPOONER. Then why this amendment?

Mr. DILLINGHAM (to Mr. LODGE). It covers all aliens.

Mr. LODGE. Of course that language has to be used, and therefore the exceptions have to be made.

Mr. SPOONER. There are no exceptions except these.

Mr. PATTERSON. As I understand——

Mr. LODGE. Because they are persons in transit.

Mr. SPOONER. Anybody who comes is in transit until he gets here.

Mr. LODGE. Not if they are going to settle here.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SPOONER. I yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. As I understand from the Senator from Vermont, as the law now is all accredited officials of foreign governments entering the United States en route to other governments pay the head tax; that is, the head tax is paid by the steamship company upon those as well as upon everybody else who is on board the vessel. That is the present law, if I understand the Senator from Vermont.

Now, that being the case, it is necessary to have the exception as to accredited officials who shall enter from contiguous territory. If that exception were not provided, the head tax would have to be paid for them, although they do not enter the United States upon a steamship or through a steamship line.

Mr. SPOONER. I agree, if that is the present law, that the amendment should be put in the bill, but I had not supposed it was the law——

Mr. LODGE. The present law is very broad.

Mr. SPOONER. I should suppose it is.

Mr. LODGE. The present law is:

The head tax herein provided for shall not be levied upon aliens in transit through the United States nor upon aliens who have once been admitted into the United States and have paid the head tax who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory.

And that is all.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not suppose the law was that if Mr. Chamberlain should come here to make a short visit he would be obliged to pay the head tax, or the steamship company would be obliged to pay it for him. Is that the law?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I understand that to be the law. It includes all alien passengers from foreign ports, and the steamship company pays it as a part of the fare. They pay it in all such instances, and this clause which has been spoken of has been inserted at the request of the immigration officers on the Canadian border, who have been embarrassed when official personages have crossed there. It is put in to relieve them.

Mr. SPOONER. I should think they would be embarrassed. I want to ask the Senator about this head tax. Is that intended to refer back to the word "duty" in the early part of the bill?

Mr. LODGE. The word "duty" ought to be changed.

Mr. SPOONER. It is in line 5, page 2. It is not an ad valorem duty, but a specific duty.

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $5 for each and every passenger.

Is that the head tax?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is the head tax.

Mr. SPOONER. Does not the Senator think he had better call it a tax instead of a duty?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I should think so.

Mr. SPOONER. Duties are imposts levied upon merchandise. I suggest to the Senator that he use the word "tax."

Mr. LODGE. Make it tax.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPOONER. If it is in order to go back to line 5, page 2, and if it is agreeable to the Senator from Vermont——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly; I have no objection.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out the word "duty" and insert "tax."

Mr. McCREARY. The Senator, I suppose, is aware that the word "duty" has been used. It is used in the act of 1903.

Mr. SPOONER. That does not make it right.

Mr. McCREARY. It does not make it right.

Mr. SPOONER. Call it a "tax," and then when you refer to tax later——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Strictly speaking, the amendment is not in order until the committee amendments are acted upon, but without objection the Chair will entertain the amendment. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "duty" and insert "tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The same amendment should be made in line 22, on page 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The same amendment should be made on page 3, line 13.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The same amendment should be made in line 18, page 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment last proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 11, on page 4.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. On page 4, line 9, I move to strike out "duty" and insert "tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 17, on page 4.

Mr. PILES. I move to strike out the words "within five years previous," after the word "insane," in line 15, page 4; and also in line 16 I move to strike out the word "two" and insert "one."

Mr. LODGE. The amendment is not in order at this time. That is a part of the existing law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the bill is being read for the consideration of committee amendments.

Mr. PILES. "Duty" was stricken out some time ago and the word "tax" substituted. I suppose that was in the original law.

Mr. LODGE. That was done by unanimous consent.

Mr. PILES. At the proper time I shall move to exclude these insane persons.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 4, line 20, after the words "classes who," to insert "are found to be and;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; persons afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 6, on page 5.

Mr. SIMMONS. Do I understand that individual amendments are not now in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They are not in order at the present, except amendments to amendments of the committee as they are reached.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of this bill if he expects to finish it to-night?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I shall be very glad to. I know no reason why we may not.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 6, line 3, after the word "prevent," to insert "citizens of the United States, or;" and in line 4, after the words "United States," to insert "who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, or women who have acquired a domicile in the United States;" so as to read:

All children under 17 years of age unaccompanied by their parents, unless coming to join parents already in this country who are able to support them or unless in the case of death of both parents they are coming to join brothers or sisters already in the United States who are willing and able to support them; but this section shall not be held to prevent citizens of the United States, or persons living in the United States who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, or women who have acquired a domicile in the United States, from sending for parents, wife, husband, children, brothers, or sisters who are not of the foregoing excluded classes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 4, to strike out "or" and insert "of;" so as to read:

For the purpose of prostitution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 12, after the word "prostitution," to strike out "or engaged in any other immoral practice;" so as to read:

And any alien woman or girl who shall be found an inmate of a house of prostitution or practicing prostitution, at any time within three years after she shall have entered the United States, shall be deemed to be unlawfully within the United States and shall be deported as provided by section 21 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 5, after the words "United States," to strike out "except by ordinary commercial letters" and insert "but this shall not be held to prevent transportation companies from issuing;" in line 8, after the word "circulars," to insert "or;" and in the same line, after the word "advertisements," to strike out "or oral representations;" so as to read:

SEC. 7. That no transportation company or owner or owners of vessels, or others engaged in transporting aliens into the United States, shall, directly or indirectly, either by writing, printing, or oral representation, solicit, invite, or encourage the immigration of any aliens into the United States, but this shall not be held to prevent transportation companies from issuing circulars or advertisements stating the sailings of their vessels and terms and facilities of transportation therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 4, on page 10.

Mr. LATIMER. I wish to offer an amendment to this section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be in order later, but is not in order now.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 10, after the word "physical," to insert "or mental;" so as to read:

SEC. 11. That upon the certificate of a medical officer of the United States Marine-Hospital Service to the effect that a rejected alien is helpless from sickness, physical or mental disability, or infancy, if such alien is accompanied by another alien, whose protection or guardianship is required by such rejected alien, such accompanying alien may also be excluded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 1, page 11.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I offer an amendment to be inserted after the word "residence," in line 1, page 11.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 1, after the word "residence," it is proposed to insert:

The name and address of the nearest relative in the country from which the alien came.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to the end of line 17, on page 12.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I move an amendment to be added to the section just read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont proposes an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Labor," in line 17, page 12, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That in case of vessels making regular trips to ports of the United States the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may, when expedient, arrange for the delivery of such lists of outgoing aliens at a later date.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 13, line 23, to strike out "officers, owners," and insert "the owners, officers."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer a committee amendment to come in after the word "line," in line 25.

The SECRETARY. In line 25, after the word "line," insert:

Other than railway lines entering the United States, which may enter into a contract, as provided in section 32 of the immigration act approved March 3, 1903.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 14, line 3, to strike out "officers, owners, or agents," and insert "owner, officer, or agent."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 15, line 23.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I desire to offer a committee amendment, which I will send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, lines 11 and 12, strike out the words "under promise or agreement of labor or service of any kind" and insert in lieu thereof "in violation of any provision of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I offer a committee amendment as an addition to the section just read.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 23, after the word "States," insert:

Unless with the express permission of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, in case it shall appear to his satisfaction that any alien on whose behalf application is made for permission to land for such treatment was not suffering with any such disease at the time of his embarkation at a foreign port for the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of the proposed section 21, line 12, page 17.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In behalf of the committee, I move to insert after the word "found," in line 19, page 16, the words "or has been allowed to land."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In behalf of the committee, I move to amend by inserting, after the word "purpose," line 10, page 17, the words:

Who shall, if directed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, accompany such aliens to their final destination in the country from which they came.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 17, line 13, to strike out "board" and insert "boards;" and in line 16 to strike out "immigrants" and insert "aliens."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, on page 18, line 17, after "decision," to strike out the words "which shall be rendered solely upon the evidence adduced before the board of special inquiry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 21, after the words "United States," to strike out "under any law or treaty now existing or hereafter made."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 24, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 26. Authority is hereby given the Commissioner-General of Immigration to establish, under the direction and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, a division of information in the Bureau of Immigration. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall appoint a chief of such division and such clerical assistants as may be necessary. It shall be the duty of said division to promote a beneficial distribution of aliens admitted into the United States among the several States and Territories desiring immigration. Correspondence shall be had with the proper officials of the States and Territories, and said division shall gather from all available sources useful information regarding the resources, products, and physical characteristics of each State and Territory, the character of the climate and soil, the prices of land, the routes of travel and cost of transportation, the opportunities of employment in skilled and unskilled occupations, the prevailing rates of wages, the costs of living, and all other information that may tend to aid aliens in selecting a place of residence, and shall publish such information in different languages, and distribute the same among all admitted aliens at the immigrant stations of the United States, and to such other persons and societies as may desire the same. When any State or Territory appoints and maintains at its own expense an agent to represent it at any of the immigrant stations of the United States such agent shall, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, have access to aliens who have been admitted to the United States for the purpose of presenting, either orally or in writing, the special inducements offered by such State or Territory to aliens to settle therein, and the Commissioner-General of Immigration may, when practicable, provide space at the various immigrant stations for displays by such agents of the resources and products of their respective States and Territories. While on duty at any immigrant station such agent shall be subject to all the regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, who, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may, for violation of any of such regulations, deny to the agent guilty of such violation any of the privileges herein granted. The expense of carrying the provisions of this section into effect shall be paid out of the immigrant fund.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I move to insert, after the word "residence," on page 19, line 18, what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 18, after the word "residence," insert:

Or which will acquaint incoming aliens with the system of the government of the States and the United States and the duties and privileges of residence therein.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, this amendment, of course, means a new bureau. It is pretty broadly worded. It says:

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall appoint a chief of such division and such clerical assistants as may be necessary.

There is no limitation upon it. I should like to have some member of the committee give us some information about it.

Mr. KEAN. I think we ought to have some explanation of the amendment.

Mr. McCREARY. I offered the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I was not aware of it.

Mr. McCREARY. I think it is one of the very best provisions we have in the pending bill. I read some statistics, which possibly the Senator from Wisconsin did not hear, showing the number of immigrants who came to this country last year.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not hear the Senator. I was on a conference committee upon the quarantine bill.

Mr. McCREARY. I read some statistics showing that the number of immigrants who came to this country last year was 1,026,000. Of that number 618 came to Kentucky, and less than a thousand went to South Carolina, Florida, and Tennessee.

I think we should do all that can be done to induce desirable immigrants to come to the Southern States. There has been a great change in the labor of the South in the last twenty years. In 1885 white labor produced only 10 per cent of the cotton, and there were about 8,000,000 bales produced in that year. Last year white labor produced 40 per cent of the cotton, and there were nearly 14,000,000 bales of cotton produced. The Southern States are progressing and developing and improving very rapidly, and, in my opinion, in less than ten years white labor will produce one-half of the cotton grown in the South. In Kentucky and, as far as I am informed, in all the Southern States they want good white labor.

I referred in the speech I made this afternoon to over 600 immigrants from Palermo, Italy, who landed at New Orleans, and after being inspected those immigrants divided. Some of them went to Louisiana, some to Missisippi, some to Texas, and some to Georgia. This shows that the question of having desirable immigrants from Europe come to various parts of the South is now being considered. The section to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers is for the purpose of attracting immigrants to every part of the United States. I did not name the Southern States exclusively, but in preparing the amendment I referred to all the States and Territories. The amendment provides that—

> The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall appoint a chief of such division and such clerical assistants as may be necessary. It shall be the duty of said division to promote a beneficial distribution of aliens admitted into the United States among the several States and Territories desiring immigration.

Of the 1,026,000 immigrants who landed on the shores of the United States the past year 700,000 of them went to five States, 315,000 went to New York, and about 250,000 went to Pennsylvania; I do not exactly remember the number, but over 200,000. Seven hundred thousand of those immigrants went to five States, as I said, and a very small number went to the Southern States.

We desire to have a division with a chief of division and proper clerical assistants who will present to the immigrants at all points where they land the productions of the various States and Territories and the proper routes to get there. We desire also that where a State has a bureau of immigration, as a number of States now have, that there shall be a place furnished them where immigrants land so that they can come in contact with the immigrants and have an opportunity of explaining to them the attractions, the climate, the transportation, etc., of the various States and Territories. It will cost, I do not know how much, but it will cost thousands of dollars to make the necessary preparations and to furnish all this information. This last amendment of the bill was drawn for the purpose of having immigrants who come to this country disseminated not in four or six States of the North, but sent all over the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. LODGE. I report from the Committee on Immigration, amendment intended to be proposed to the pending bill, which I ask may be printed and lie upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and ordered to lie upon the table, in the absence of objection.

Mr. KEAN. It is very evident that we can not dispose of the amendment to-night. It proposes to establish a national exposition for forty-five States at all the immigrant stations, and I should think it had better go over until morning. If there is no objection, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I simply rose for the purpose of saying a word to the Senator from Wisconsin, who made an inquiry for information a few moments ago, to which the Senator from Kentucky replied. I wish to say, in addition to what the Senator from Kentucky has stated, that at the last session of Congress I introduced a bill that was in substance——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, what has become of the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] made the motion and then yielded to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. KEAN. I did not suppose the Senator from North Carolina wanted to go on with the debate on the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I took the floor to make a statement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield?

Mr. KEAN. For a brief statement, of course, I will yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I rose to make a very brief statement. I was simply saying that I introduced at the last session of Congress a bill which was very similar to the amendment under consideration. Before I introduced that bill I examined the report of the Commissioner of Immigration, and the identical principle which is involved in the pending amendment, which was drawn by the Senator from Kentucky, is recommended by the Commissioner of Immigration as the best method of securing a just and proper distribution of the alien immigration that is now flooding our country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the Senator from New Jersey will withhold his motion further, the Chair will lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives.

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 8410. An act to authorize the Charleston Light and Water Power Company to construct and maintain a dam across Goose Creek, in Berkeley County, in the State of South Carolina;

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, I give notice that on Thursday, after the routine morning business, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1442) to increase the efficiency of the militia and promote rifle practice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's notice will be entered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 23, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill making an appropriation for urgent deficiencies.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19572) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1906, and for other purposes.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of this urgent deficiency bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I will have to object.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this urgent deficiency bill.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 111, noes 33.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, it appears there is no quorum present, and I suggest in the interim a call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 195, nays 13, answered "present" 24, not voting 149, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 19572—an urgent deficiency bill—with Mr. HOAR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year 1906, and for other purposes.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, the necessity for this urgent deficiency bill arises from the fact that the appropriations for the current year for the fees of witnesses and the fees of jurors in the United States courts are now practically exhausted, and unless this provision be immediately made important judicial business will have to be postponed, to the detriment of the service and actual increased expense to the Government. If United States marshals are without money courts may have to be adjourned, or it may give rise to the very undesirable sale of witness certificates. We find a large balance unused of the appropriation for the year 1905, and in consequence, rather than make a direct appropriation, this bill proposes the transfer of $60,000 from the appropriation for 1905–6 for witnesses and $30,000 for jurors.

The deficiency is one that could not have been anticipated. Expenses of this kind are contingent upon the business of the courts. This year there has been an extraordinary amount of business because of the large number of land-fraud cases in the western districts and cases for using the mails to defraud, in which many witnesses were necessary.

The other item of the bill is an appropriation of $25,000 made necessary to meet the expenses of opening to entry and settlement two reservations now ready to be opened under the law. It is the purpose of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to open the Crow Reservation in Montana, now ready, about the 15th of June, and the Shoshone Reservation, in Wyoming, about the 15th of August. In order to provide for the clerical force and have them on the ground at these dates an appropriation must be made immediately, and particularly that settlers may erect houses and get the land under cultivation before winter sets in; and this bill submits an appropriation of $25,000——

Mr. TAWNEY. Which is reimbursable.

Mr. LITTAUER. The expenses pertaining to the opening of each reservation are to be reimbursed to the United States from the sale of lands under the law. Now, Mr. Chairman, unless some one wants to ask some questions, I will ask that the bill be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How much general debate is there to be on the bill?

Mr. LITTAUER. I did not suggest any time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You want to proceed at once with the reading of the bill?

Mr. LITTAUER. I want to proceed at once with the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then there would be no general debate. I want fifteen minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON], who is the ranking minority member of the committee, stated that there was no request for general debate on this bill. Now, there are very urgent items in the bill, which can be passed in a very few moments if there is no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I can get through in fifteen minutes.

Mr. LITTAUER. I will yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Department of Justice is very desirous for this appropriation to be made available at the earliest possible moment. Some courts are in session now that will in a few days be compelled to close or adjourn unless the appropriation for jury fees and witness fees, especially, is made available. It simply transfers a balance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman can yield to me for fifteen minutes?

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I move that general debate on this bill close in fifteen minutes, and I will yield the gentleman from Mississippi that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Unanimous consent is not necessary. I ask the gentleman to yield me fifteen minutes; we are in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I raise the point of order against the motion of the gentleman. General debate can not be closed except by motion in the House or unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to address myself to the defense of the House and of the Speaker, made, in my opinion, necessary by an article that appears in the Washington Post of this morning, from which it is very evident that the Post and the country are taking a very erroneous view of the motives and conduct of the Speaker of this House and the motives and conduct of the House itself. This article is headed:

CANNON gets quorum—How "Uncle Joe" puts WILLIAMS's tactics to rout.

Now, I want to read a part of it. It is headed "Speaker CANNON finds quorum." "Finds," not counts, in the significant word used.

"The Chair will count," said the Speaker, after one of Mr. WILLIAMS's points, and hastily glancing over the Chamber, the Speaker continued: "The Chair has counted up to 193 and has not finished the count."

SPEAKER CANNON FINDS QUORUM.

Everybody laughed, including JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, who retorted: "There's no telling what the Speaker would have found had he finished." This brought forth renewed laughter.

At another time Mr. CANNON found a quorum almost instantly, and Mr. BEALL of Texas asked by what arithmetical process the Speaker reached his conclusion. Instantly the Speaker replied: "The Chair counted in blocks of ten, and there is a quorum present," which reply again convulsed the House with laughter, the Democrats enjoying it as much as did the Republicans.

From this it is evident, Mr. Chairman, that the press of the country, or a part of it at any rate, has conceived the notion that our innocent jokes upon the floor of the House about counting a quorum have gone to the point of making us condone in the Speaker what, of course, the Speaker has never done and what the Speaker would never do, to wit, dishonestly count a quorum when there was not a quorum present. There has not been a time when the Speaker has counted a quorum when I have not been aware of the fact that there was a quorum in the House at some time of the procedure of the count. I do not want the idea to go abroad, in justice to myself, that if the Speaker undertook to count a quorum when there was none present that it would strike me as a humorous procedure. Nor do I want the idea to go abroad that a man who has served the country so long and so faithfully and so honestly would undertake to count a quorum if it were not present, thereby putting an untruth into the RECORD. We have our laughs and our jokes about counting quorums, and we especially have our laugh about the manner in which the Speaker jerks his gavel while he is doing it; but I do not believe for one moment, and I hope that nobody else believes for one moment, that he would violate the sacred fundamental requirement of truth and the constitutional requirement of the manner in which we must legislate, to wit, with a quorum, or that he would regard that violation as a matter of humor, and I want nobody to believe that he would.

Section 5 of Article I of the Constitution says that "a majority of each House shall constitute a quorum to do business." Of course, the Speaker, like everybody else, is upon honor that when a quorum is demanded there shall be a quorum to do business. The only question that has ever arisen between the two parties has been as to how you should arrive at the fact of a quorum, whether by an answer on a roll call or by counting those present. That point has been decided in favor of counting those actually present in order to constitute a quorum. But the last man in the United States who would undertake to count a quorum when there was none present would be the Speaker of this House. [Applause.] The Constitution then, as a part of that same section, recites, "and the yeas and nays of the members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the Journal."

So that there are just two things that the rules themselves can not touch. They can not dispense with the requirement of a quorum to do business and they can not dispense with the constitutional right of a Member to demand that a quorum shall be present to do business. They can not dispense with the right of one-fifth of those present to call for the yeas and nays, under any pretense whatsoever, nor can they dispense with a yea-and-nay vote when one-fifth of those present do rise for the purpose of getting the membership enrolled.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the article read by me was published, because I am glad of the opportunity that presents itself to me as the floor leader of the minority to defend not only myself from the charge—or rather it is not a charge exactly, but from the supposition—that I could be so flippant as to regard as a joke a pretended or false ascertainment of a quorum of the House of Representatives by requirement of the Constitution, which is the master and creator of the House and of its rules, and in accordance with which all rules must have their life, and in nonaccordance with which any rule must have its death. I also welcome it as an opportunity to defend the Speaker against this assumption that he would treat this grave constitutional right as merely a matter of humor.

We have our fun in the House, and we ought to have it. We are grown-up boys, as all men are. Sometimes I am reminded when the Speaker counts a quorum in his characteristic way of doing it, but who arrives, as I always believe, at an honest belief in the actual presence of a quorum, of a story I heard not long ago about a lady, a man with a watch, and a small child. In calling for a count I am afraid sometimes I am actuated pretty much by the same motive as was this lady who continued to ask the time of day. She had a child with her who was crying, and there was in the station a man with a watch. She wanted to know the time of day, and asked the man if he could tell her. It happened that this man had a spasmodic, convulsive sort of way of moving his countenance, and the moment that the child saw it the child ceased crying, got into perfectly good humor, and began to laugh. The lady had discovered a method of keeping the child quiet. In a few moments the child was again crying, and the lady went back to the man and said: "Mister, I beg your pardon, but will you tell me the time again?" Being a courteous man, he told her again. The third time she came to him, and then a fourth, with short intervals elapsing. The fifth time the man said: "Madam, it seems to me that you ought to remember the time five minutes. I do not object to telling you, but why are you so anxious to get the time every five or ten minutes?" She said: "Mister, I am not asking because I want to know the time, but the movements of your countenance amuse my baby so that it is about the only thing that keeps him quiet." [Laughter.] So sometimes I expect that I want a quorum counted because the movements of the Speaker's gavel amuse us so that they keep the House quiet and put everybody in a good humor. [Laughter.]

But I want the country to understand that there is nobody in the House of Representatives that is laughing at or making a joke of the requirements of any part of the fundamental law of the Republic of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this bill will be out of the way probably in a few minutes, and the motion will be made to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to discuss the consular and diplomatic bill. I rise to ask the House to vote down that motion so that we can get at the immigration bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the session is getting close to an end, and to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to discuss that bill and devote two days to making campaign speeches should not be permitted. Here is everybody saying that we want to adjourn quickly. We can not adjourn until we get the diplomatic bill out of the way, and there is a distinct movement to get us to adjourn before the immigration bill is out of the way. Now, I want to read you a list of important bills, which are privileged, that are coming up here, and see whether I am not just in asking action on the immigration bill. Here is the consular and diplomatic bill coming, the sundry civil bill coming, the general deficiency bill coming. If you want to have campaign debates for two or three days put it on the general deficiency bill, after we have got rid of the main business, and not interject it in the middle of the session. Then comes immigration, child labor, naturalization, public buildings, and pure food; every one of them highly privileged, every one of them going to take time. Then there is the conference on the rate bill, the conference on the statehood bill, I hope, a conference on the Philippine tariff bill, and all that is going to take a long time, and they are going to try to beat the immigration bill out by not letting it come up.

Therefore I say, Mr. Chairman, the way to treat this matter is to vote down motions to go into Committee of the Whole to consider this appropriation bill, because we know that we will have to pass it later, whereas if we pass these bills we can not get away without passing this important legislation. I do not want to oppose any older or wiser man on the floor of this House, but I wish to point out to you that the pure-food bill has been through the Senate and is practically sure of action in this House if pressed. The immigration bill has not been through the Senate, and the sooner we can get action on it the better for us all. As for the appropriation bills, carrying as they do two or three days of general political debate, they can wait. They are bound to pass anyway, and then the general debate can be had on the last of them.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I hope that this House, when the vote comes as to whether or not it will go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, will vote "no." We will have that bill up later to a certainty, but may never have as good a chance again to get up the immigration bill.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], I want to say to the House that the immigration bill has been made a privileged bill, and the only way that I can see how it can possibly escape consideration at this session is for us to go into a fight every time a bill is brought up, especially an appropriation bill, and try to defeat the motion in order to get at some of these other privileged bills. I think if the House goes on in the usual ordinary parliamentary way, with the preference that the House has already given the immigration bill, the gentleman will not have much trouble.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from New York to yield me sufficient time in which to answer his colleague.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the rules of the House give higher privilege, I know very well, to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, but it does not make any difference if it gives it the very highest privilege. If we want to get up the immigration bill we can vote down the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the diplomatic bill, and no harm is done even if it has the highest privilege on the face of the globe. It is always subject to the question of consideration. I say vote that down and we will get to the immigration bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to know how this bill comes into the House.

Mr. LITTAUER. By recommendation of a majority of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Did the committee ever consider this bill?

Mr. LITTAUER. Informally, this morning.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there such haste about this bill that it is necessary to report it without the committee meeting to consider it or being informed of it?

Mr. LITTAUER. The two items covered by the bill were of such a simple nature that the members of the committee who did consider it thought it could be reported to the House without a formal meeting of the committee by asking the assent of all those members of the committee who were in the neighborhood—a majority.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to inquire of the gentleman what authority there is for reporting a bill that is not considered by the committee?

Mr. LITTAUER. The procedure has been followed a number of times before, where a bill of the simple, urgent nature of this bill was reported to the House with a favorable recommendation by a majority of the committee without holding a formal meeting of the committee. If the gentleman had been in the neighborhood of the committee room his assent would have been asked, and I believe without doubt given. This is a deficiency bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know that in the case of the emergency appropriation bill for the relief of the people of San Francisco the bill was called up here without being considered by a committee, because of its great urgency. So far as I am concerned, however, no matter how simple a bill may be, I believe the best results in legislation are obtained by having bills submitted properly at a meeting of the committee that has jurisdiction of them.

Mr. LITTAUER. And the gentleman well knows that that is frequently done with bills of this character by the Committee on Appropriations; so frequently, in fact, that the practice is justified by custom.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I am not so sure of the advisability of the practice, and it is not a practice that I shall approve, however prevalent it may have been in the past. Here is a bill reported, not printed in a way that any Member can obtain a copy of it, and called up for action. But for the fact that I and several other members of the committee with whom I have consulted happened to be here, the bill would have been passed, upon the theory that it had been acted upon by the committee, whereas, as a matter of fact, it was never submitted to the committee. I simply wish to say that, so far as I am concerned, if I happen to be present when a bill is brought into the House, apparently reported by a committee, but not as a matter of fact, I shall interpose a point of order against the consideration of the bill. I say that now so that hereafter notice at least will be given to members of the committee, so that they shall have an opportunity to know what the committee is supposed to be doing. Otherwise there will be very little advantage or benefit derived from the presence of some members on the committees of the House.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, unless there be desire for further debate or amendment to this bill, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with a favorable recommendation to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOAR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 17359) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1906, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with a recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. LITTAUER. I move the previous question on the bill to its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to find out—I have no objection to this bill, I think it is all right—but I desire to inquire how this bill got before the House.

The SPEAKER. It was reported by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood the gentleman a moment ago to say in answer to his colleague that this bill had not been reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LITTAUER. The bill has been reported with the assent of a majority of the Committee on Appropriations; a formal meeting of the committee was not held.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I do not suppose it was reported. If a majority of the committee can meet without notice to the minority, without official action, I certainly do not think that is a proper report, and I do not think, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KEIFER. Regular order!

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I am making a point of order, which is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The point of order is this, that this bill, according to the statement of the gentleman from New York, has not been reported to the House by the committee. It has not been printed, either, for the House after being reported from the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the point of order comes too late. This bill is now before the House with a formal report from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The time for making the point of order, if there was any, was when the bill was up in the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule, and overrules the point of order which the gentleman from Alabama makes. Turning to page 635 of the Manual and Digest the Chair finds the following decision: "The House having voted to consider a report it is too late to question whether or not the report has been made properly." Now, not only——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. One moment. Not only the House has actually considered it by referring it to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, but that committee has reported it; the big committee consisting of all the members of the House has reported it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, and the Chair could not under the precedents, and the principle if there were no precedents, nullify by a ruling the action of the great committee and of the House in referring the bill to that committee for consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will bear with me on that point for a minute, I want to state this on the point of order. There is nothing the matter with the bill; I have no objection to it, but——

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order there is nothing before the House except the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. The point of order has been decided.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the Chair can hear me if he desires to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has discretion to hear the gentleman, very briefly indeed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I only ask for a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to say this because it is of importance to the minority. The gentleman from New York states to the House that he reported the bill to the House and the House presumed that he did report it from the committee——

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not desire to hear the gentleman upon that point.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But that is what I want to say——

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of debate and criticism as to the propriety of action.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No——

The SPEAKER. The House has acted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And I am making a point on that. Now, why did the House act? Because the House was not informed and was not informed until it got into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union as to the status of the case, and therefore I say it is not in line with the decision——

The SPEAKER. That might have been an argument or may be an argument for the rejection of the bill, but the gentleman from New York demands the previous question, and the Chair only deals with the point of order. What the ruling of the Chair would have been if it had been made in time is not necessary to say and the Chair is not advised, but the Chair can say to the gentleman that the House referred this bill to the Committee of the Whole and that committee reported it back after consideration with the recommendation that it do pass, and it is clearly too late——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Chair, I respectfully appeal from the ruling of the Chair on the question, and I wish to say for this reason——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from New York to allow me——

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, the gentleman has been indulged——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not had an uninterrupted chance to state the reason why I do not think this procedure should take place, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman withdraw his appeal?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If I could speak to the bill I would not make an appeal.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman gets unanimous consent to speak for five minutes on this question, will he withdraw his appeal?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will withdraw his motion, I will withdraw my appeal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I want to say there is no objection to this bill. It is a meritorious one, but I do say it is a serious proposition to take up a bill that has not been reported and concerning which the minority members of the committee have not been informed that it was going to be brought before this House, taken up contrary to the rules of the House, not printed, no information given concerning it, and then put on its passage in this way. I do not think that the House ought to accept that proposition. It is not fair to the minority side of the House nor is it fair to the individual Members of the House. The rules are established in the House of Representatives for the protection of the minority and for the protection of the individual Members of the House, and if you establish a precedent that a gentleman can present a bill on this floor, stating that it is reported by a committee and then afterwards it turns out that it is merely a private consultation of the majority members of the committee, as I understand my friend from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] says it was, and the minority members not informed——

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. LITTAUER. The gentleman was formerly a member of the Committee on Appropriations. In his experience has not this same procedure been held before?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But when it has come it has come by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. LITTAUER. Of the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. When a bill has been brought here, an urgent deficiency bill that has not been considered by the committee universally, unanimous consent has been asked for its consideration, and it has no right to be considered under the rules of this House unless it has first gone to a committee, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] well knows, and unless the unanimous consent of this House is obtained. I repeat that it is not treating the minority fairly, and it is not treating the individual membership of this House fairly, to bring a bill here, no matter how meritorious it is, without complying with the rules of the House or receiving unanimous consent to violate them.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] moves the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. LITTAUER. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—yeas 101, nays 55.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No quorum present, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-five Members are present—a quorum.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, let us have the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER (after counting). Thirty-nine Members have arisen—not a sufficient number——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The other side, Mr. Speaker.

The other side was taken.

The SPEAKER (after counting). Upon this demand the yeas are 39, and nays 140—a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 159, nays 49, answered "present" 25, not voting 148, as follows:

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Balance of the day:

Mr. LORIMER with Mr. LAMAR.

On this vote:

Mr. OLMSTED with Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts.

Mr. PRINCE with Mr. MCNARY.

Mr. PALMER with Mr. LEWIS.

Mr. RIVES with Mr. LIVINGSTON.

Mr. MANN with Mr. LESTER.

Mr. CALDER with Mr. KELIHER.

Mr. HEPBURN with Mr. HILL of Mississippi.

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. ELLERBE.

Mr. FLETCHER with Mr. CLARK of Florida.

Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. BURLESON.

Mr. WILSON with Mr. COCKRAN.

Mr. ALEXANDER with Mr. SHACKLEFORD.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD with Mr. CLAYTON.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CURTIS). The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. STANLEY. I would like to have my name recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. STANLEY. I was not here when my name was called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's name can not be called.

Mr. BURLESON. How is my name recorded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's name is not recorded.

Mr. BURLESON. In order that there may be no doubt about a quorum being present, I desire to vote "present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a quorum present.

Mr. MANN. How am I recorded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. LITTAUER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19264) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907; and, Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia, whom I believe is in charge of the bill on the other side, how much time he desires for general debate?

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman is not present, but I know there is a request for forty-five minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I raise the point of order that we can not set the time for general debate now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his question of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I raise the question of order that they can not settle debate on going into Committee of the Whole when there has been no debate.

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19264) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and on that I move the previous question.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. One moment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Would it be in order for me to amend the motion of the gentleman by substituting——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the previous question.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that the previous question is not in order on a motion to go into Committee of the Whole to consider a particular bill.

The SPEAKER. This motion, the Chair finds, after consulting one who knows the precedents, is not amendable and is not debatable.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Then I hope it will be voted down, to get at the immigration bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question was taken on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 27.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, there happens to be no quorum present, as disclosed by the vote.

The SPEAKER. The roll call has just disclosed the presence of a quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I think that, as the Speaker well knows, is no evidence of the fact that a quorum is in the Hall now.

The SPEAKER. Under the practice——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Speaker will count the House at this time he will discover no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Under the practice, a vote having just been taken by the yeas and nays, the most accurate way of taking it, disclosed a quorum——

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that whether a quorum was disclosed at that time or not, there is not a quorum in the Hall now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point. There is a quorum present. The ayes have it, and the House determines to go into Committee of the Whole——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER (continuing). And the gentleman from Kansas will take the chair.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The CHAIRMAN. All gentlemen will be seated.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I was on my feet awaiting recognition for a verification of the vote by which the House went into Committee of the Whole. As soon as the gentleman from Mississippi had finished——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to answer the question. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair in the House and knows nothing of what occurred then. We are now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of the vote by which the House went into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman has no right to take the gentleman from Pennsylvania off his feet to make that motion.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration——

Mr. WILLIAMS. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania (continuing). Of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and I move that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order before any business is transacted, and every gentleman will take his seat.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has moved that the committee do now rise. To that motion the Chair has thus far given no recognition. I submit that the gentleman was perfectly within his right and in order when he made that motion.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I claim the floor, having made the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the right of the gentleman from Massachusetts to move that the committee do now rise, and will submit the question to the committee for its action.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the committee do now rise.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 43, noes 85.

Accordingly the motion was rejected.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To that I am compelled to object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill in full.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in submitting the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill for the coming fiscal year I would state that owing to the permanency of the service there is not very much change from year to year in the items as submitted for the consideration of the House. This is more than usually true of the present bill, owing to the passage at this session of the bill for the reorganization of the consular service, in which we fixed the salaries of all the consular officers; so that really your committee, in the consideration of this bill, took no account of those items in that bill.

The principal changes in the bill are, first, the raising of the salaries of some of the ambassadors to the same amount—$17,500—as the others. This was done, first, at the recommendation of the State Department, and, second, because the elevation of the office carries with it naturally increased expenses. But there was another reason which I think will appeal strongly to the common sense of this House, and that is that it will create several ambassadorships at posts where the salary will be adequate, so that a man without large means can accept the honor at the hands of his country and represent it abroad, though his pocket be not filled with millions.

In the choosing of our representatives abroad it is one of the disadvantages that the pecuniary question has to enter so largely, for at the present salaries allowed by the Congress of the United States it is impossible for our ambassadors at any of the leading posts to go there and live in a way that is in keeping with the dignity of this country without expending more money than the amount of the salary. Nay, more, the ambassador is not in a position to return the hospitality of his colleagues, a dilemma in which, I think, no American would like to find himself.

Your committee, while recognizing the estimates handed in by the State Department, have tried very hard to exercise that conservative spirit to meet the judgment of the House, and we have only allowed increases where, after careful scrutiny and examination, we have felt that it was absolutely necessary. For the information of the House in a general way I will state that the estimates amounted to $3,760,117.17, an increase of more than $1,500,000 over the bill of last year. This bill which we submit to you provides for a total sum of $2,744,969.17, only an increase of $260,962.45 over the existing law, and a decrease of $1,000,000 from the estimates as submitted by the Department. Such careful revision as that I feel sure will meet the approval of the House.

With the other items there is an increase of $5,000 for the extension of chargé d'affaires ad interim. Clerks at embassies, $32,000; but when I tell you that in the deficiency bill brought in this year there was a deficiency last year of $30,000, you will see that there is scarcely any increase. For six students at the embassy of Japan under similar terms as that existing in China to-day, we have allowed $6,000. This was strongly urged not only by the State Department, but by the business interests of the country, because with the new era and the new plan established to open up the trade relations with Japan, as our people are not familiar as a rule with the language of that country, it was deemed essential that these students should acquire and learn the language of Japan, so as to become interpreters at the consulships and aid the advertising of the trade of the country.

Two additional clerks at the embassy at London are allowed for, at a moderate salary, and for the reason which I will explain more at length when we come to the item of the new scheme proposed by the Secretary of State for the improvement and gathering of news and spreading it among our diplomatic agents abroad so that each one at every post may be thoroughly conversant with what is going on at the post where his colleagues are established.

There is a small item of $5,070.41 for the reerection of a consulate that was destroyed in Tahiti by a cyclone. The contingent fund has been increased by a small amount, but much less than that asked for by the Department. For the last year the contingent fund of the diplomatic service was $190,000. The Department asked for $340,000, and we have given them $225,000—an increase of $35,000. When I tell you that the expenses of our Department grows from year to year, this is moderate.

In the consular service the need was more pressing. To-day the contingent fund in the Department is entirely exhausted, and consuls are compelled to pay their own postage and other expenses out of their own pockets or the service would come to a standstill.

Mr. BATES. Would it disturb the gentleman if I asked him a question?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I would rather answer the question when we come to the items in the bill.

Mr. BATES. I would like to ask the gentleman at this point if there is any provision in this bill for the employment of what are now called "consular inspectors," who, under the direction of the State Department, visit the field and call upon the consuls with special reference to their reporting trade statistics and the chances for the extension of commerce in their field?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will state that in the act passed at the beginning of this session there was a provision for the establishment of five inspectors to visit the consuls and inspect them and pass upon their efficiency. It was a new feature and introduced at the urgent request of the Secretary of State, and it is hoped it will aid materially in the efficiency of the service in the future.

Mr. BATES. Does not that feature really add to the duties of all the consuls in the field a new function that they never have performed before—that is, to be the eyes and ears of the Government in the way of trade development?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I can not state that, because these functions have always been supposed to adhere to the consular service before. The difference between the diplomatic and consular service lies especially in the fact that the consular service is the business branch of the Government, while the diplomatic service has entirely different functions. The consuls are supposed to represent the business interests of our country; they are supposed to inquire into the needs of the countries, gather statistics, and report them to the State Department. In reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will say that the duties of these new inspectors are not new, because the consuls have frequently instituted those inquiries before. The object of these inspectors is principally to visit and inspect and see that the consuls live up to and report the practical information for our merchant and business men. The total compensation provided in the bill for consuls-general and consular inspectors is $1,058,000. That is appropriated in a lump sum and was made necessary by the bill which I have already adverted to, which was passed at this session of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to inquire whether the amount follows strictly the amount as fixed in the bill that passed about thirty or forty days ago?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. To the penny.

Mr. JOHNSON. There are no increases from that bill?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Not a penny.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. Are there increases in the salaries of the ambassadors or the clerks over the rates fixed by the existing law?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. There are increases in the salaries of some in the diplomatic service and also in the salaries of some of the clerks, which will appear when we get to the items of the bill. As I have already said, the salaries of the four new ambassadors have been raised to conform to the salaries of the other ambassadors, namely, $17,500.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the salary now? Is it a raise from $12,000 to $17,500?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. It is a raise from $12,000.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I would state further to the gentleman that some of them have been recently created, and in that case the salary had not been fixed at all. The office was formerly occupied by ministers.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does not the gentleman think a mistake has been made in equalizing the salaries paid at the smaller courts with those paid at such a court as the Court of St. James and other places of greater importance?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman listened to what I said a moment ago——

Mr. JOHNSON. I am very sorry to state that I was not in the room at the time the gentleman spoke.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I rather congratulated the House on this provision, and for this reason, that heretofore the expense of our embassies has been so great that really nobody could take the office except a wealthy man, but in the creation of the office, for instance at Tokyo, at Brazil, at Vienna, a man of moderate means could go there and live on the salary of $17,500 as the representative of our country should live. I think this provision opens the door for the promotion of men distinguished in public life through their brains and not through their pocketbooks, and makes it possible for them to accept this distinction at the hands of their country to represent it and be paid a salary commensurate with the office and its dignity.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is a very patriotic speech.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am but representing the views of the committee, or at least trying to.

In conclusion, I would say that in the debate, when we come to consider the bill item by item, there will be various things which, I think, will appeal to the judgment of the House; but there is one in particular, which comes under a general head, to which I wish to refer now. Our present Secretary of State has a proposition which, I think, will add very materially to the practical side of our diplomatic service. It has been necessary heretofore, when we wish to send out information to our representatives abroad, that separate cables should be sent from the State Department, at great expense, in order that they might know what was going on. The Secretary proposes a scheme something like this: That the embassy at London should be made, if you will, a clearing house for news, that a general cable instruction, for instance, be sent to London, and from there within twenty-four hours mailed to nearly all of the neighboring embassies, so that they can all be informed of what is going on at home and at the embassies in their immediate neighborhood. So, too, reports would be gathered from all of the different embassies and legations and mailed to London, and from there may be transmitted to America at the expense of one cable. It is not, however, so much a matter of money as it is of obtaining complete information, for this plan will give to each ambassador and minister at the several posts information of what is going on, so that they will know at their respective posts the exact situation of affairs. It often chances that, in ignorance of that information, something may be going on and taking place at a post, and the ambassador or minister there is not cognizant of it at all, or does not know what is going on at the other posts, and so is not in a position to take in the full significance of what is transpiring under his observation. I consider this is one of the best schemes which have been devised for some time.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman, and I now yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to state that there has been no agreement with reference to time, and unless some other agreement is entered into by unanimous consent the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few remarks upon the bill, but as some of my colleagues desire to speak to-day, not being able to be here to-morrow, I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL].

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this session of Congress is supposed to be drawing near its close. The Members on this side and the people of this country had until recently hoped for some remedial legislation against the flagrant and open abuses prevalent at this time in all departments of the Federal Government and in all parts of the Union.

REPUBLICAN PROMISES.

The Republican party leaders in the last campaign stoutly asserted that all needed reforms would be made if the Republican party were continued in power. The result of the election again intrusted to the Republicans every branch of the Government. They have absolutely full control and plenary power. They have not only a working majority, but an overwhelming majority in both Houses of Congress. Their failure to enact needed legislation is without the shadow of excuse. Such failure can be accounted for only on one of two propositions:

First, their inability to perform the task, or,

Second, their determination not to do it.

In either event they have shown themselves to be unworthy of the trust confided to them, and should be dismissed from power. With a flourish of trumpets these Republican leaders said, among other things, that the great railroad corporations and common carriers should be regulated by law, and that the tariff should be "revised by its friends."

URGENT REASONS WHY PLEDGE SHOULD BE KEPT.

There are abundant reasons why this pledge should be fulfilled. The transportation companies have in their grip the business interests of the whole country and are controlling to their own advantage the price of labor and the selling price of nearly every commodity. The producer and the consumer are alike their victims. They are engaged in different lines of business, outside of transportation as carriers, affecting practically all the necessaries of life. They are combining and merging all they can by law and all they please without law. There seems to be no statute so close but they can find a loophole through it. They are doing their own will without let or hindrance.

The last general tariff law, commonly known as the "Dingley Act," was passed by Congress nearly ten years ago. It is known as a high protective tariff. Many of its most important schedules were admittedly too high, and were secured in the bill on the specious pretense that they would assist in procuring favorable reciprocity treaties, and would thereby be reduced to a proper rate. The bill stands to-day the same as it was enacted, with a few unimportant exceptions.

"REPUBLICAN MACHINE" HYPOCRITICAL PRETENSE.

What has been done by the leaders who constitute and run the "Republican machine" in this Congress? Unqualifiedly, nothing, except to make a hypocritical pretense as to some things and to unblushingly advocate the "stand-pat" doctrine in other things.

Making a pretense of regulating the railroads, a bill was framed satisfactory to the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee and rushed through this House. The Democrats were compelled to take it as dictated by the "machine," or have no part in framing it. Yielding to patriotic desire to do the best that was possible under the circumstances, they got some small concessions and voted for the bill, hoping to get some further relief by amendments in the Senate, where debate was allowed and some real opportunity afforded to better the measure. But the country should not overlook the miserable condition of affairs in the House of Representatives, where a few men in power, with iron hand, dictate all legislative action. Were it not so serious it would be a joke on representative government. The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee is not constituted to give relief from railroad mismanagement; and all the great committees of the House have been organized to do the bidding of the political machine controlling Congressional action.

The result of all this will be a weak railroad rate bill calculated to give little or no real relief. I do not wish to speak from the standpoint of a scold nor to unjustly find fault, but it is time that the real status of affairs be understood by the people. There is ample intelligence in this Congress to rightly frame legislation on any subject before it. It is not a lack of ability; it is a determination to stand by the corporations who furnish the campaign funds and keep the party in power.

THE PEOPLE'S RIGHTS TRADED BY THE "MACHINE."

It is a statement generally asserted and believed that the "stand-pat" machine in the House, which is opposed to tariff revision, had some sort of an agreement with the Administration by which the tariff issue should be sidetracked and a pretense be made to pass a satisfactory railroad rate bill. That certainly seems to be the fact. It is all pretense, nothing real. The trusts are safe; wealth, produced by the toiling masses, is still constantly pouring into the coffers of the great incorporated and legalized monopolies. The consequent concentration of wealth, so great in amount as to stagger the comprehension of human intellect, is a greater menace to free government than all the armed hosts of its enemies.

The completeness with which the Republican party has deserted the people's interests is apparent in its treatment of every vital question before Congress.

THE RIGHT OF LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT DESPISED.

The right of local self-government is a hated Democratic doctrine, as are also individualism and personal liberty. In order to stand with the liquor dealers, the mask of hypocrisy has been used to deceive the people while denying them just relief from the abuses of the interstate liquor traffic. The "Hepburn-Dolliver bill," as it is called, has been held out as a bait to catch the votes of localities and States where prohibitive liquor laws have been enacted; but what has been done? The Republicans have had full power to act for many years, yet they have done nothing. This bill was once reported to the House with a "personal-use" clause, and then permitted to die on the Calendar. The change in the law sought by those really favoring that bill was to prevent liquor dealers, under the protection of the interstate-commerce law, overriding local prohibitive laws. It has not been passed, and will not be as long as the people do not resent the substitution of pretense and hypocrisy for honest action.

"C. O. D." SHIPMENT OF LIQUORS.

A bill, introduced in this Congress by the gentleman from Mississippi, the Democratic leader, which prohibits interstate C. O. D. packages of spirituous liquors being sent into prohibition or "local-option" territory is, I fear, hopelessly "pigeonholed" in the Judiciary Committee.

In a town or country, when local option has been adopted by the people, liquor can thus be shipped to "boot leggers" and law-breaking idlers, who, after the liquor has arrived, induce those who wish to debauch themselves with drink (often wild and thoughtless boys in their teens) to furnish the money to take the liquor from the express office, thus making really a sale in the locality where it is prohibited by law, in effect nullifying the local law made by the people. Our local rights are thus infringed, express offices become liquor shops, law is disregarded, drunkenness is encouraged, public and private morals are debased, and our youth corrupted. Yet this party "machine" cares not, and will not either offend or injure the liquor interests.

DEPARTMENT RULING SHIELDS UNLAWFUL LIQUOR SELLING.

Under the law as made by the Republican party, a tax for liquor selling is collected from any person wishing to engage in the business anywhere, whether or not the sale is prohibited by local law.

Receipts are given for such payments of tax. Some States, as Texas, have made the possession of such receipt prima facie evidence against a party charged with a violation of the law. But the Republican Administration keeps secret the names of the parties paying this tax. The Department rules that they be kept secret! A bill prohibiting the granting of such tax receipts in localities where the sale is unlawful and, also, one requiring that the names of those paying the tax as liquor dealers should be disclosed when applied for have been introduced in the House. The former has not been reported, and, after long effort, the latter has passed the House. Whether it ever becomes a law will depend upon the amount of pressure which accompanies the demand for its passage. There was really no reason for such a bill, except for the regulation of the Republican Secretary of the Treasury keeping secret the names of liquor sellers in "dry" States and localities in the interest of the liquor trade. And yet the Republican party and its "machine" leaders have no doubt received much support from the moral element, who have been blinded by false professions as to temperance legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a fact that the law requires the collectors of internal revenue to post the name of every person who pays a tax for the sale of liquor, whether it is malt or spiritous?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Post what?

Mr. STAFFORD. To post a list of all those persons paying the tax.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. On the contrary, the rule of the Department has been, as I am creditably informed and believe, that the revenue collectors will not furnish the names to parties applying for them, and a bill has just passed this House a few days ago requiring them to do so. It has not yet passed the Senate, but it has been driven through this House, and I will speak of that presently.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg your pardon, because the law, as it now is, requires the collectors of internal revenue, in posting, to furnish the public the names of all persons who pay the tax. The scope of the bill passed under suspension of the rules two weeks ago provided there should be a certificate furnished to any applicant, upon the payment of a small fee, which could be used as prima facie evidence, as the gentleman states in his State, in any prosecution that might be brought for the sale of liquor.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON. The law is as the gentleman from Wisconsin states it, that they are required to post the names of those who pay the license in their place of business in their office; but the Secretary of the Treasury, by his regulation, prohibits internal-revenue officers from furnishing certified certificates or appearing in court as a witness against a person who——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not from appearing as a witness; not that. The State courts would compel him to come into court and testify; but, if the gentleman will allow me a little further interruption——

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be correct in this matter, but as my time is limited I would not like too much of it to be taken up.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Just a word. In many of the States of the Union—there is no reason why it should not be so in all States of the Union—the holding of the certificate——

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I did not yield for a statement. I am talking about the United States law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The United States law furnishing a certificate under the State law is prima facie evidence.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. That is the law in Texas. The fact of the matter is that under the law as it now stands and under the ruling of the Department by a Republican Administration the names of parties engaged in liquor selling in Texas and in other States that have local-option districts and counties in them were kept from the people and from the officers, who desired those names for the purpose of obtaining evidence against the parties violating the law; and a bill, the sole purpose of which was to accomplish that result, has been, after long delay, driven through this House. Whether it ever becomes a law I know not, and that depends upon the pressure behind it in the Senate.

THE RIGHT TO STATEHOOD TRIFLED WITH AND DENIED.

The attitude of the Republican party toward the Territories is another proof that it is unworthy to rule. When for its own benefit new States are needed it makes them in any number it desires, regardless of the interests of the country or the rights of the people concerned. But when four Territories having a population of more than 2,000,000 citizens, ready for and capable of statehood, apply for admission into the Union they are wantonly denied the privilege purely for party reasons.

Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Indian Territory ought to become States—either three or four, as their people may desire—so that they may have local self-government, equal rights with the other citizens of the United States, and work out their own destiny. The balance of power in the Government would then be more equal; and the grand Union of States, reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, would, with mutual love and confidence, build by united effort the greatest constitutional government on earth. These considerations, like the framing of the Constitution, should be above and beyond mere party considerations. They appeal alike to every patriotic heart. But here we find them considered as so much stock in trade, to be exploited by the dominant party for its own selfish purposes.

Thousands of children must be without the advantages of education; business interests paralyzed; the laws remain inadequate; carpetbaggers kept in office; corporations devouring the natural resources; railroads paying no taxes; the future clouded in uncertainty and well-grounded distrust; the people, by hope long deferred, made sick at heart; all this that the Republican party may carefully feel its way to the exploitation of these Territories and their vast resources for its own benefit and the profit of its corporation allies!

The sisterhood of States should make common cause in rebuking this cruel and outrageous crime. Impelled by fear, the "machine" may yet admit one State; but the people will understand the motive and should not stay the hand of retribution.

INTERESTS OF LABOR DISREGARDED.

The cause of labor has been treated with like insincerity and delay. Our wage-earners—working in competition with the pauper labor of Europe, brought here by Republican syndicates, under Republican laws; toiling at their own risk in hazardous places and working with dangerous machinery; unprotected by adequate legal remedy against injury at fault of employers; bound down and imprisoned, browbeaten and enslaved by "government by injunction"—look in vain to this Republican Congress for justice and relief. The "liability bill," a truly good measure, has, indeed, after much travail and waiting, passed the House. That it may become a law (which is doubtful) is the hope of every good citizen.

But, I fear, no further relief can be expected. The corporations and the courts, the power of money and the Administration, will strive to continue the wage-earners in the position of mere "hewers of wood and drawers of water." The greatly increased cost of living more than offsets what little increase they may have had in wages. The cause of the laborer is the cause of humanity. It is only by labor that we are entitled to bread. It has been truly said that "genius is work, work, work!"

If the interests of labor are awake, the lessons learned will not be in vain. When the cause of the laborer fails industrial servitude follows. Is not that deplorable condition fast approaching, or at least dangerously imminent?

CORPORATION INFLUENCE ON CONGRESS.

The influence of incorporated wealth on the lawmaking power is as well known as it is monstrous. Its methods and plans are less understood. When capital objects to any reform the door of opportunity is closed.

The corporations hold out to the Members of Congress valuable and tempting gifts, passes, franks, and privileges, and God only knows to what extent. These tempting baits are seized with avidity by many intrusted as servants of the people, and the fish are caught on the corporation hook. A bill has been introduced by me making criminal these indirect bribes, but it is held fast in committee by the "machine" and can not be considered on this floor. Were it reported and submitted to this House on an aye-and-no vote the evident justice and necessity of the measure, backed by the popular demand, would insure its passage through the House at least. If you dispute this proposition, don't mouth about it, try it. Try it, if you dare.

TARIFF REVISION SMOTHERED BY THE MACHINE.

No greater evidence of this influence need be wanted than the conduct of the Republican party as to promised revision of the tariff. The pledges to justly revise the tariff schedules, which have been so often repeated in public prints, on the hustings, on the floor of Congress, and its party platform, are too plain and positive to be denied; and they have so frequently been quoted I will not again cumber the RECORD by their repetition.

When the public becomes aroused on the subject, you on the Republican side quickly claim that corrections shall be made, but that it can be safely attempted only "by its friends"—you being the friends!

As soon as the election is over, however, you try to engage the attention of the country on other matters, and immediately resume your "stand-pat" policy on the tariff. You claim that the Dingley bill is in the interest of labor, when you know it has been used to enslave labor, and we all know that the just interests of labor are identical with the interests of the whole people. [Applause on Democratic side.] The hand of labor laid the corner stone and has builded the structure of this Government. Labor and respectability go hand in hand.

You claim that the Dingley bill protects American industries when everyone knows it assists the combinations of capital to crush all competition and absorb or ruin the smaller independent enterprises. You say it promotes commerce when you know it lessens our foreign trade and delivers over our home market to the tender mercies of insatiable greed. You say it is a blessing to the country, and you know that many of the most useful and necessary articles are thereby supplied to Europe and South America more than 25 per cent cheaper than the prices our own people are compelled to pay for like goods.

A government should protect its own people, not rob them. Robbery under the name of "protection" is more vicious than if it were open, for if open to the understanding of the whole people it could not be defended and would be prevented or punished. If the American people are robbed and swindled by shrewd and powerful combinations in trade, the Government should not be a party to it. Fraud and corruption are poisons which will, in time, surely bring to any nation decay and death. If we would honor our forefathers, let it not be by vociferous acclaim only, but by the emulation of their virtues, consecration to duty, and devotion to our beloved country.

It is a trite saying that "the tariff is the mother of trusts." It is also certain that many schedules, heavily taxing articles of everyday use in ordinary business and necessaries of life, are desired by no one except the great corporations whose profits they increase. Many articles heavily taxed bring no revenue at all, because the tax is prohibitive and such articles are not imported. Yet these unjust rates must continue, say the "stand-pat" statesmen, when their only effect is to permit prices to be raised in the home market, thereby levying tribute on the whole country, taking the fruits of toil without compensation. Will an intelligent citizenship longer wait for redress?

The plea has been made that there should be "protection" (tariff) equal to the difference between the price of labor in America and in other countries. How weak that sounds, when we know that the tariff on many necessary commodities is more than the whole value of the finished product. How can the difference in price of labor be more than the whole labor cost of production plus the cost of material? That such arguments should have ever passed as sound in any enlightened country is one of the political paradoxes of modern times.

Our tariff system is intricate, requiring much study to unravel and point out its injustice. A careful study of it, however, reveals a network of unprecedented class legislation.

There are 168 trusts directly protected by the tariff; many more combines with partial protection. But few people understand or appreciate how the protective tariff has fostered trusts and combines which control the price of the commodities they manufacture. Of the 287 principal combines and associations formed to advance and keep up prices, 168 are directly protected by the tariff, although there are 206 trusts more or less protected, with a capitalization of $5,571,616,153, or 74 per cent of the total capital of the principal trusts and associations or combines.

As an example, take this list, which contains twenty articles used for building purposes that are directly protected by the tariff, which are controlled by trusts and combines, with the tariff duty on each article:

Article.	Price controlled by—	Tariff duty, specific and ad valorem.
Angles, steel	United States Steel Co	¼ cent per pound.
Brick	Local combines	25 per cent.
Bar iron	Bar Association	⅛ cent per pound.
Lead carbonate	National Lead Co	2½ cents per pound.
Doorknobs	Association	45 per cent.
Glass, window	American Window Glass Co.	1¼ cents per pound and up.
Lumber	Association	$2 per M feet.
Locks	do	45 per cent.
Nails, wire	United States Steel Co	¼ cent per pound.
Nails, cut	Association	7/8 cent per pound.
Plate glass	Pittsburg Plate Glass Co	8 to 35 cents per square foot.

Article.	Price controlled by—	Tariff duty, specific and ad valorem.
Pipe, lead	National Lead Co	2½ cents per pound.
Putty	Association	1 cent per pound.
Red lead	National Lead Co	2½ cents per pound.
Steel sheets	United States Steel Co	⅛ cent per pound and up.
Steel billets	do	⅛ cent per pound.
Steel beams	Association	⅛ cent per pound.
Steel bars	do	⅛ cent per pound.
Shingles	Association, local	30 cents per M.
Wire-cloth screen	Association	1½ cents per pound and 40 per cent.

An examination of the list just read will show that persons wishing to construct residences, barns, business houses, or any other buildings must pay to the trusts from one-fourth to double the value of the material they use.

The list I will now read contains fourteen articles necessary for general use on farms and in shops and in everyday business:

Article.	Price controlled by—	Tariff duty, specific and ad valorem.
Axes	American Ax and Tool Co.	45 per cent.
Barb wire	United States Steel Co	1.90 cents per pound.
Chains	Union Steel and Chain Co.	3 cents per pound.
Files	Association	$1 per dozen.
Glue	American Glue Co	35 per cent.
Horse nails	Association	2½ cents per pound.
Jute rope	Standard Rope and Twine Co.	45 per cent.
Leather	United States Leather Co.	Do.
Linen shoe thread	Association	Do.
Rope, cotton	Standard Rope and Twine Co.	Do
Manila rope	do	Do.
Saws	National Saw Co	30 per cent.
Shovels	Ames Shovel Co	45 per cent.
Sisal rope	Standard Rope and Twine Co.	Do.

Here is a list which contains twenty-three articles of general necessity:

Article.	Price controlled by.	Tariff duty, specific and ad valorem.
Borax	World trust	5 cents per pound.
Broadcloths	Woolen trust	44 cents per pound and 55 per cent.
Cotton thread	American Thread Co	6 cents per dozen.
Cotton yarns	Association	6 cents per pound and up.
Carpets, Brussels	American Carpet Co	44 cents a yard and 40 per cent.
Coffins	National Casket Co	35 per cent.
Earthenware	Trenton Pottery Co	55 per cent.
Flannels	American Woolen trust	22 cents per pound and 30 per cent.
Lard	Packers' combine	2 cents per pound.
Meat, beef	do	Do.
Meat, salt pork, etc	do	25 per cent.
Meat, hams, etc	do	5 cents per pound.
Overcoatings	American Woolen Co	44 cents per pound and 50 per cent.
Paper, wrapping	Union Bag and Paper Co	25 per cent.
Paper, writing	Two combine	2 cents per pound and 10 per cent.
Powder	Association	6 cents per pound.
Raisins	do	2½ cents per pound.
Shot	do	45 per cent.
Starch	National Starch Co	1½ cents per pound.
Suitings	American Woolen Co	44 cents per pound and 55 per cent.
Sadirons	Association	45 per cent.
Tin plates	United States Steel Co	1½ cents per pound.
Trouserings	American Woolen Co	44 cents per pound and 55 per cent.

These lists show a few only of the articles necessary for use in everyday life. They are mere samples of tariff injustice as the law stands to-day. The revenue derived is nominal, because the tax is practically prohibitive, and the imports amount to nothing in comparison with the volume of these articles consumed in this country. The tax, therefore, serves as a wall to shut out foreign competition. The home market is thus in the grip of monopolistic combines which add the amount of the tariff to the fair market price of such commodities, and the consumers are compelled to pay it. The difference between the aggregate so forced from the people and the amount of a normal market price runs up into the billions each year. The real facts are almost inconceivable. Huge corporations have in the past few years grown to such proportions that they own nearly all our manufactories, our transportation lines, our coal mines, our oil fields, our forests, our iron deposits, our marble, granite, and other building stone, our copper, silver, gold, lead, and zinc mines; in fact, they are fast acquiring all our vast natural wealth, which, when fully possessed and protected by law, will perpetuate a class of moneyed barons never dreamed of previous to this generation. Such a condition means the impoverishment and slavery of the masses. This, of course, would not be tolerated; revolution would follow and this continent be drenched in blood. History teaches us that this conclusion is no chimerical fancy; it is a natural result. Mankind can be enslaved only for a time. Freedom is the natural condition and will always reassert itself.

Why permit the continuance of this iniquitous and ruinous system? The Republican party has deceived the people and enacted the present laws. It refuses to correct the existing evils. It has full power. It can pass any law or repeal any law it chooses. There is no hindrance. The people must accept and approve present conditions or reject them by driving the Republican party from power. If the farmer, the mechanic, the miner, the railroad man, the wage-earner, the average unprotected citizen, votes for the Republican party, and especially for the "machine" leaders, what can he expect other than a continuation of existing injustice, greater in scope and more terrible in effect? Remember the Republicans have no excuse. They have full power, and flatly refuse to give relief. They belong to the trusts and fear to offend them.

These "machine" leaders have been and are deceiving the great mass of voters who put them in power. The rank and file of the Republican party want justice, and if only they would examine the record of their Representatives the avenging hand of an outraged constituency would strike down these "standpat" statesmen and have a new deal as well as a "square" one. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Our revolution should be a bloodless one—at the ballot box. It is all in the hands of the people. They should elect true men, real servants, who will represent them, and them only. The attorneys and agents of the great corporations, asking for special privileges, have no rightful place in the Congress. The districts and States which send to the Congress attorneys, agents, representatives, or shareholders of corporate monopoly do a wrong to the whole nation. The minions of power and feeders on graft will never willingly depart. They must be scourged from the temple. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Elect honest and capable men, and we will have honest and efficient laws. A tree is known by its fruits. "A corrupt tree can not bring forth good fruit." Let "every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit be hewn down and cast into the fire." [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 16472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COUSINS].

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, at the time the so-called consular reform bill passed this body there was little or no time or opportunity for the discussion of that measure. It was my intention at the time to make some observations in relation to the measure and its development, and I will, without objection, print some matter on this subject, and for the present I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to print some remarks on the consular reform bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman also reserves the balance of his time.

[Mr. COUSINS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I am led to make some observations on the so-called "rate bill," in view of what has transpired since its passage by this House. When it left the House it met with popular approval and fairly satisfied the demand for rate legislation. Several questions growing out of it have been fully discussed, and I am going to say something in a general way in answer to two propositions that have been advanced, said by some to have never been thought of, while the bill was in the House, and therefore never considered by the House, and never would have been thought of had it not been for debates outside this House. This House needs no defense for its share of the work. It promptly passed a measure answering the demand of the people and giving to them a measure of relief. It is not a question of procorporation or anticorporation, but an important legal question, affecting as an important a matter as was ever presented to Congress. Two mighty elements are in conflict. The people are determined to have rate legislation. The corporations created by the people to advance their interests do not take kindly to the proposition and are opposed to governmental interference. The question must be met. It can not be avoided. It must be legally done. What is the law of the case?

I am not going to discuss the merits of the question or the bill generally, but content myself by saying the House act, in my opinion, is not obnoxious to the objection that it is unconstitutional because it fails to contain a provision for court review. I am not going to answer the objections to the House act directly and in detail, but indirectly, by proving its constitutionality on the two propositions by the Constitution itself, and thereby prove the fallaciousness of the objections raised which, to the credit of the House, were not even suggested here. I would not discuss the question at this time were it not for the fact that I desire to suggest a line of argument that I believe correct, one that I believe should be considered. I appreciate that I stand out against a number of distinguished gentlemen who have come pretty near making the railroad interests of the country believe they are right, but notwithstanding the large number of gentlemen who have so openly and extensively argued to the contrary, I am going to argue that the House act is constitutional without a provision for court review to determine the reasonableness of the rate, and that such a provision is not necessary; that to attach to it a provision for such review will absolutely destroy the act and will afford the people no relief, and all I ask is for those interested to examine the question for themselves and they will have no trouble in concurring with me. Believing as I do as to court review, there is no necessity for discussing the other question involved, as to the power of Congress to prevent a court using injunctional power, but as so much has been said in regard to it I will, before I conclude, have something to say on this point. As the question of court review is a constitutional one, it will be necessary to ascertain what the Constitution says and means. Article I, section 8, subdivision 3:

> To regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes.

And subdivision 18:

> To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof.

It seems to be universally conceded that these enumerated powers authorize Congress to fix rates. There can be no question about it. Otherwise the carrier, and not Congress, would be regulating commerce between the States. The Supreme Court has always held that Congress can prevent any person, corporation, or State from regulating or imposing any restraint upon interstate commerce. Congress, not the carrier, must be the master. Under its power Congress can fix the rate to prevent regulation or restraint. This contention finds support in the decisions of the Supreme Court:

> There are three obvious and dissimilar courses open for consideration:
> 1. Congress might itself prescribe the rates.
> 2. Congress might commit to some subordinate tribunal this duty.
> 3. Congress might leave with the companies the right to fix rates subject to regulations and restrictions, as well as to that rule which is as old as the existence of common carriers, to wit, that rates must be reasonable. (Interstate Commerce Commission v. Railway Company, 167 U. S., 479–494.)

It is now settled that Congress can fix rates, but we are met with the contention that some great men have startled the country with, the statement that Congress can not exercise a constitutional power without making a provision in the law that an interested party may have the right, before Congress can exercise the power, to go into court and stay proceedings and ascertain if the power has been reasonably exercised. In other words, as I understand them, Congress can only fix a reasonable rate, and that must be by act of Congress, open to review by the courts. Great lawyers, in desperate cases, take positions that they themselves do not believe in, that never convince the court; but the general public sometimes call it greatness. If a young and inexperienced lawyer did it he would be laughed out of court and condemned by the public.

Now, I challenge any person to produce an authority of court or text writer to the effect that before Congress can exercise a power a provision must be made that any person claiming to be injured can go into court and have his rights adjudicated. In other words, express authority for court review. Now, I insist that Congress can exercise its powers without providing for court review, and if Congress exceeds its power, the party wronged has his day in court without any provision for court review.

The argument made against the House bill compels this discussion to be academic and elementary. It must be remembered that the right to fix rates is given Congress by the Constitution and a court has no right to interfere without the permission of Congress, unless Congress exceeds its power, to the injury of some person. The opponents of the bill seem alarmed about the constitutionality of the measure, unless a provision is made for court review. This is the song of the spider to the fly. The power and limitation, if any, are to be found in the Constitution, and this same Constitution protects the citizen in his rights without any express legislative provision. Suppose, to illustrate, that Congress, in the plenitude of its power, saw fit to levy a tax sufficient to pay the entire public debt at once and leave a large surplus in the Treasury, there would be no necessity for providing that if anyone was hurt by the tax he should have his day in the court. Or, in other words, there would be no need of making a provision for court review. This is an illustration of due process of law, for all will concede that the Government could levy taxes even if it amounted to confiscation to a million people, causing a forced payment, without providing for a single citizen coming into court. There was no provision in the income tax case for court review. It was claimed that the Congress had exceeded its power, but parties found their way into court and the law was held to be unconstitutional. This is a question arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States. If a person's constitutional right is invaded, a court is open to him without any express provision. And his constitutional right is invaded if any government, State or Federal, interferes with his person or property when it has no authority or power to perform the act complained of, and the moment Congress steps beyond the bounds of its authority to the injury of a person, that person has a right of action by court review, as old as civilization itself. The Constitution provides for court review. For Article III of the Constitution says: "The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in the courts named in the Constitution." This judicial power is the authority to hear and determine the right of the carrier. The carrier complains that the Congress has exceeded its authority and is by its legislation depriving the carrier of its property. The right of the carrier is a constitutional one. The Constitution protects the carrier in the enjoyment of its property, and the power of Congress to interfere with the property of the carrier must be found in this same Constitution. The right is one arising under the Constitution, where we find, in section 2 of Article III, that this authority of the court to hear and determine the right of the carrier extends to all cases in law and equity, hence includes the case of the carrier. The question is, Has the carrier a right of action? If so, a court is open to redress the wrong. Has Congress, in fixing rates, gone beyond its power? For that is the only question to be tried. Every action depends upon the right of one party and the duty of the other, without express provision for court review. When an act of Congress is challenged in court, inquiry is limited to the question of power.

The Supreme Court, in Angle v. Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railway Company (151 U. S., 1–18), says:

> The rule upon which this decision rests has been followed in many cases and has become a settled rule of our jurisprudence. The rule, briefly stated, is that whenever an act of the legislature is challenged in court, the inquiry is limited to the question of power, and does not extend to the matter of expediency, the motives of the legislators, or the reasons which were spread before them to induce the passage of the act. This principle rests upon the independence of the legislature as one of the coordinate departments of the Government.

The carrier has a right to the enjoyment of its property, subject to the power of Congress to fix its charges, and if Congress does not exceed its authority no right of action exists. But if Congress exceeds its authority to the injury of the carrier, it has a right of action given by the Constitution, and it does not require an act of Congress to exercise that right. The right of the carrier and the wrong of the Congress constitute the right of action, enforceable without an act of Congress. Whether an act of Congress is within the limits of its delegated power or is not, is a judicial question to be decided by the courts, the Constitution having in express terms declared that the judicial power shall extend to all cases arising under this Constitution. As said by Story in his valuable work on the Constitution, commencing section 1645:

> It is observable that the language is that the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States.
> Section 1646. Another inquiry may be, What constitutes a case within the meaning of this clause? It is clear that the judicial department is authorized to exercise jurisdiction to the full extent of the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States whenever any question respecting them shall assume such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it. When it has assumed such a form it then becomes a case, and then, and not till then, the judicial power attaches to it. A case, then, in the sense of this clause of the Constitution, arises when some subject touching the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States is submitted to the courts by a party who asserts his rights in the form prescribed by law.

The learned jurist does not suggest anywhere that if the case he speaks of arises there must be legislative permission for court review to protect the rights of the citizen.

Smyth v. Ames (169 U. S., 466) is an instructive case on this point. The legislature of the State of Nebraska passed an act to regulate railroads, classify freights, and fix reasonable maximum rates, and gave the carrier the right to bring an action in the State court to test the reasonableness of the rate. The carrier brought an action in equity in the Federal court (p. 515). The court said it was contended that the plaintiffs had an adequate remedy at law and that the circuit court of the United States, sitting in equity, was therefore without jurisdiction (p. 516). "The adequacy or inadequacy of a remedy at law for the protection of the rights of one entitled upon any ground to invoke the powers of a court is one to be conclusively determined by the statutes of the particular State in which suit may be brought. One who is entitled to sue in the Federal court may invoke its jurisdiction and equity whenever the established principles and rules of equity permit such a suit in that court, and he can not be deprived of that right by reason of his being allowed to sue at law in a State court on the same cause of action. If the case in its essence be one cognizable in equity, the plaintiff, the required value being in dispute, may invoke the equity powers of the proper circuit court of the United States whenever jurisdiction attaches by reason of diverse citizenship or upon any other ground of Federal jurisdiction." It will be observed that the Federal court taking jurisdiction held the legislation unconstitutional and granted the relief prayed for without any provision for court review by the Federal court.

As was aptly said by the Supreme Court in Smith v. Adams (130 U. S., 167, p. 173)—

> Whenever the claim or contention of a party takes such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it, then it has become a case or controversy. Thus, in Osborn v. Bank of the United States (9 Wheat., 738–819), this court, speaking by Chief Justice Marshall, after quoting the third article of the Constitution declaring the extent of the judicial power of the United States, said: "This clause enables the judicial department to receive jurisdiction to the full extent of the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States. When any question respecting them shall assume such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting on it that power is capable of acting only when the subject is submitted to it by a party who asserts his rights in the form prescribed by law. It then becomes a case, and the Constitution declares that the judicial power shall extend to all cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States."

When Congress fixes the rate it is but the exercise of a power conferred on Congress by the Constitution, and there is no instance of a legislative right to protect anyone injured by the exercise by the Government of a power conferred upon it by the Constitution. The Constitution is the protection, and the court opens to the carrier as soon as the wrong is done. The Supreme Court has many times pointed out the remedy.

Mr. Justice Miller, concurring in Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company v. Minnesota (134 U. S., 418), said, on page 460:

> That the proper, if not the only, mode of judicial relief against the tariff of rates established by the legislature or by its commission is by a bill in chancery asserting its unreasonable character and its conflict with the Constitution of the United States and asking a decree of court forbidding the corporation from exacting such fare as excessive or establishing its right to collect the rates as being within the limits of a just compensation for the service rendered; that until this is done it is not competent for each individual having dealings with the carrying corporation or for the corporation with regard to each individual, who demands its services to raise a contest in the courts over the questions which ought to be settled in this general and conclusive method.

In Reagan v. Farmers' Loan and Trust Company (154 U. S., 362–395) the court said:

> So that if in any case there should be any mistake in action on part of a State or its commission injurious to the rights of the railroad corporation, any citizen of another State interested directly therein can find in the Federal court all the relief which a court of equity is justified in giving.

The same rule would apply in case the rate is fixed by Congress. (See also Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S., p. 516–517.)

Instead of making the bill constitutional by including court review, it will make it absolutely valueless to confer upon the court the power to pass upon the reasonableness of the rate. [Applause.] My contention is, Congress has the right to fix the rate, and I think the better argument is that the judicial power can not interfere unless Congress so wills it; but I am willing to concede for the sake of the argument that the fifth amendment limits the power of Congress. There is a vast difference between Congress exercising its constitutional power to the limit of confiscation and fixing a reasonable rate and permitting the carrier to litigate in court the reasonableness of the rate. In other words, confiscation is one thing and, as the people will find out, the reasonableness of the rate an entirely different proposition.

If Congress exercises its power and fixes the rate without any provision for court review, the carrier can go into court in defense of its right, but can not have the aid of an injunction without alleging under oath such state of facts as tend to prove confiscation, and can not have final judgment without proving confiscation, something that can not be proven; therefore their case will fail. Congress will never be guilty of fixing a confiscatory rate, therefore the carrier will never have any relief in court; and, no matter how low the rate, confiscation can never be proven. The burden of proof—the burden, the cost, and loss—will fall upon the carrier. The carrier will not dispute but what it would be more than satisfactory to defeat the House act. Realizing this can not be done, the next best thing in order is to secure an amendment to the House act permitting court review as to the reasonableness of the rate, which is equivalent to defeating the act. If successful, the carrier will be as well satisfied as if the act was beaten, for now the tables will be turned. Reasonableness is an elastic relative term; the carrier initiates the rate. The dissatisfied shipper appeals to the Commission; the Commission fixes the rate; the dissatisfied carrier appeals to the court. Exclude the question of cost and delay, both important to the shipper, and the absolute worthlessness of the legislation will appear, when the people discover that interstate rates can not be fixed upon a reasonable basis subject to court review. The shippers will not be able to unite, and not one of them can tire the carriers out. The conflicting interests of the shippers will cause them to disunite, and the carriers will be left alone in their glory. Here it may be well to issue a note of warning to the carrier, and advise a reading of the history of Missouri Compromise. The people are not going to be quieted or abate their interest in this matter. They are thoroughly aroused and in earnest. They demand of their representatives the exercise of a constitutional power only; they are determined that rates shall be regulated by law and not at the will of the carrier. It may take time, but the will of the people will prevail. It is simple justice only. The servant of the people who fails or refuses to do his duty and come to the relief of the people will be lost in the current of disapproval, and will never be found or again return. [Applause.] I deny that demagogues have brought about this condition of affairs; the carrier alone is responsible; absolute defiance of law, selfishness, and utter disregard of the rights of the people have marked their course.

I helped the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to write in the statute book legislation which would save the carrier and satisfy the people, had the carrier conformed to the law. In the conference it was suggested that the troublesome question was then settled and there would be peace between the carrier and the people. "Yes," I answered, "if the carrier would but obey the law, but there is too much selfishness in human nature for that." Violation of the law marks the daily course of the carrier, confiscating the money and rights of the people at every step. Is it any wonder the American people have become aroused? It is to their credit they have. Had they not, they would not be entitled to the name and rights of American citizenship. The carrier will never have any cause for complaint. They control the situation to-day. They want the right to go into court to find out whether the rate is a reasonable one. This is a right without express provision for court review, as old as the existence of common carriers, in favor of both carrier and shipper. (See 167 U. S., p. 494, already cited.) Hence why this talk, noise, and legislation to do what can and always has been done? First legislate for a reasonable and remunerative rate and then expressly provide that the carrier can go into court to ascertain whether the rate fixed by the Commission is reasonable and remunerative. Let them go to work at once and establish reasonable rates with reference to themselves and the rights of the people, obey the law, pay taxes, stop rebates and discriminations, be honest, and there will be no attempt to interfere with them or their property. [Applause.] The true friend of the carrier is the people, not the men who are assisting them to defy the law and the people. [Applause.] The people will befriend every interest that will be just and conform to the law. As so much has been said about the due process of law, it may be well in this connection to briefly refer to it. According to my theory, the doctrine of due process of law will be enforced and respected when Congress makes the rate without provision for court review. Congress has the power to make rate legislation and the courts are open to the carrier. Due process of law does not necessarily require the interference of judicial power.

As said by Story, section 1941:

The meaning of the phrase "due process of law," it has been said, is in effect to affirm the right of trial according to the process and proceedings of the common law. Without doubt, it does affirm this in very many cases, but certainly not in all. There are many cases in which it is admissible to take property without giving any trial in the courts and by a mode somewhat arbitrary. And there are also cases in which persons may be deprived of liberty and even of life by other process than that of the common-law courts and which, nevertheless, is due process for the special cases and under the special circumstances.

In McMillan v. Anderson (95 U. S. 37), in a case coming up from the State of Louisiana, the court held that it was not necessary to have a trial. The only question under the Constitution is, Was it lawfully done? That is, as applied to this case. Does Congress have the power to fix the rate? And in Public Clearing House v. Coyne (194 U. S., 497, 508) the court said:

That due process of law does not necessarily require the interference of the judicial power is laid down in many cases and by many eminent writers upon the subject of constitutional limitations. (Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Co., 18 How., 272, 280; Bushnell v. Leland, 164 U. S., 684.) As was said by Judge Cooley, in Weimer v. Bunbury (30 Michigan, 201):

"There is nothing in these words ('due process of law'), however, that necessarily implies that due process of law must be judicial process. Much of the process by means of which the Government is carried on and the order of society maintained is purely executive or administrative. Temporary deprivations of liberty or property must often take place through the action of ministerial or executive officers or functionaries, or even of private parties, where it has never been supposed that the common law would afford redress. If the ordinary daily transactions of the Departments, which involve an interference with private rights, were required to be submitted to the courts before action was finally taken, the result would entail practically a suspension of some of the most important functions of the Government."

As I have indicated, it is doubtful in my mind whether there is any limitation upon the power of Congress. It is agreed by all that the fourteenth amendment is not, as that is a limitation upon the power of the States only. If the Constitution places any limitations upon the power of Congress to fix rates, it is to be found in the fifth amendment:

[ARTICLE V.]

No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service, in time of war, or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

Here, if at all, is the only limitation upon the power of Congress—that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law. And, as argued, it is due process of law for Congress to provide for rate legislation. Accordingly the question is, Is Congress proceeding according to the Constitution? Due process of law varies with particular cases. A person charged with stealing an apple has the benefit of a trial by jury, and, if convicted, might be fined as low as $1 and costs or one or two days in jail. A person who intentionally insults a judge in open court will be tried without a jury and may be sentenced to prison for one year—due process of law in both cases. In one case the Constitution requires a jury and in the other it does not. Rate legislation is just exactly the same as the question of taxation. Where there is no constitutional limitations or prohibition, the legislative will is final and conclusive, and legislative will is due process of law.

In other words, the Constitution says Congress shall not deprive a person of his property without proceeding according to law, whatever law that is. Assuming there is power to make the law, the law itself must be followed and obeyed, otherwise it is not due process of law. In this case the Commission can not fix rates without direction from Congress and must comply with the law; otherwise this would be depriving the carrier of its property without due process of law. But it is entirely different, and it is due process of law, when Congress authorizes the rate—that is, directly itself or indirectly through a commission; and that is, as said, due process of law, and nothing further is required. This is assuming that the court is open to the carrier, but there will be nothing to try because Congress has proceeded according to the Constitution.

Under the fourteenth amendment the power of the States is further limited by preventing them denying to any person within their jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. While it is agreed that the fourteenth amendment applies to and includes and protects corporations, it is going to be a difficult piece of work to say as much under the fifth amendment, for the Supreme Court has held that corporations are not citizens within the meaning of article 4 section 2. "The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States."

In Blake v. McClung (172 U. S., 239, p. 259) it is said:

It has long been settled that for purposes of suit by or against it, in the courts of the United States, the members of a corporation are to be conclusively presumed to be citizens of the State, creating such corporation. And therefore it has been said: "A corporation is to be deemed for such purposes as citizens of the State under whose laws it was organized. But it is equally well settled and we now hold that a corporation is not a citizen within the meaning of the constitutional provision that the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States."

However, a corporation is a person within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment, in order to give the courts jurisdiction of suits by or against them.

In Barrow Steamship Company v. Kane (170 U. S., 100) Kane brought action against defendant company, a corporation organized under the laws of Great Britain. The company resisted on the ground that, being a foreign corporation, it was not within the judiciary act of 1789, not within the words "citizens or aliens." The court held corporations were included, saying:

The constant tendency of judicial decisions in modern times has been in the direction of putting corporations upon the same footing as natural persons in regard to the jurisdiction of suits by or against them. Originally the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of suits between a citizen of one State and a corporation of another State has been maintained upon the theory that the persons composing the corporations were suing or being sued, and upon the presumption that all these persons were citizens of the State by which the corporation was created, but this presumption could be rebutted; but earlier cases were overruled, and it is now the settled law of the court that for the purposes of suing and being sued a corporation is to be considered as a citizen of the State where created, and the conclusive presumption of the law is that the persons composing the corporation are citizens of the same State with the corporation.

This case would suggest that a corporation is held to be a person for the purpose of giving courts jurisdiction.

This feature of the argument may be of interest to the carrier and it may be well worth their while to examine it with care. To-day the people are in the mood to be reasonable, but if the carrier forces the question to the Supreme Court and that tribunal holds that there is no limitation upon the power of Congress to fix rates it may be difficult to restrain the people. The attitude of the carrier to-day is going to drive many good, conservative men from public life, whose place will be filled by demagogues of the first water, whose presence here may not be beneficial to the country at large. Let it be again stated that the only limitation, if any, on the power of Congress is to be found in the fifth amendment, and if it applies it only prevents Congress from fixing rates without due process of law, so it is certainly not a limit on the rate. The only question is whether proceedings to fix the rate are legal—and all will agree that the fixing of a rate is purely a legislative power, and the question as to whether Congress has exceeded its power or not is a judicial one for the courts.

This all will agree to; and let us, for the sake of the argument and in the interest of common justice, concede that the fifth amendment is a limitation upon the power of Congress that only prohibits Congress from fixing a rate that will deprive the carrier of its property without due process of law. In the first place, Congress is not going to deprive the carrier of its property without due process of law. Congress has the right to fix the rates and leave the courts open to the carrier to ascertain if Congress in fixing the rate has exceeded its constitutional power. The question is not has Congress fixed the rate too low, but has Congress in fixing the rate deprived the carrier of its property without due process of law? And, as said, due process of law does not necessarily require the interference of the judicial power. All the talk about a reasonable rate, court review, and due process of law comes from State legislation, as will be seen in the examination of many cases in the Supreme Court, notably in the oft-quoted case of the Railway Company v. Minnesota (134 U. S., 458) and Smyth v. Ames (169 U. S., 466). In the Minnesota case, in short, the legislature of Minnesota created a railroad commission with power to fix reasonable rates and then made the rate so fixed final and conclusive and denied the carrier access to the courts. A rate was fixed which the carrier said was unreasonable, and a mandamus was brought to compel compliance with the law. The company was denied the right to appear and prove its defense. The Supreme Court, under the fourteenth amendment, reversed the decree. Many similar cases can be found, all growing out of State legislation—a vast difference between the limited power given a railroad commission by State legislations, with the limitations of the fourteenth amendment applying, and the power of Congress without any limitation or no further limitation than is to be found in the fifth amendment.

Further, Congress is not going to prevent a carrier from going into court, and, besides that, Congress is not going to exceed its powers in any event. Covington and Lexington Turnpike Road Company v. Sanford (164 U. S., 578) is an instructive case. The question arose under a State law as affected by the fourteenth amendment. Plaintiff was incorporated by the laws of the State of Kentucky to construct and maintain a turnpike and by its charter permitted to collect certain tolls. The legislature reduced the tolls by an amendment to the charter, and plaintiff sought to show that the new tariff or rates was unjust and unreasonable and prevented the plaintiff company out of its receipts from maintaining its road in proper condition for public use or from earning any dividends whatever for stockholders. These facts were admitted by a demurrer to the complaint. The State courts held the legislation valid. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed the State court, saying, on page 592:

Upon the authority of previous decisions there is a remedy in the courts for relief against legislation establishing a tariff of rates which is so unreasonable as to practically destroy the value of the property of companies engaged in the carrying business and that specially made the courts of the United States treat such a question as a judicial one and hold such acts of legislation to be in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, as depriving the companies of their property without due process of law and as depriving them of the equal protection of the laws.

It will be noted that there is no suggestion of court review, but the Supreme Court boldly says that the carrier has a remedy in the courts.

I disagree with those learned gentlemen who insist that the Supreme Court has decided that the carrier has a constitutional right to just compensation. This question is very fully discussed in the case of Covington and Lexington Turnpike Road Company v. Sanford (164 U. S., 578, pp. 596 and 597), where the court said:

It can not be said that a corporation is entitled as of right and without reference to the interests of the public to realize a given per cent upon its capital stock when the question arises whether the legislature has exceeded its constitutional power in prescribing rates to be charged by a corporation controlling a public highway. Stockholders are not the only persons whose rights or interests are to be considered. The rights of the public are not to be ignored. It is alleged here that the rates prescribed are unreasonable and unjust to the company and its stockholders, but that involves an inquiry as to what is reasonable and just for the public.

This language is cited by the court with approval in Smyth v. Ames (169 U. S., 445–466).

It is very clear that those opposed to rate legislation are anxious to have Congress abdicate its functions, and instead of fixing a rate within its power to so legislate that the shipper will be forced into court to prove the reasonableness of the rate, as said, an absolute impossibility. This burden should not be thrown upon the shipper. Without any reference in the bill to court review, the burden would rest upon the carrier to prove that Congress had exceeded its powers, something that the carrier can never do, and, as said, Congress will not exceed its power in fixing the rate.

The House act is much more just and favorable to the carrier than the circumstances and the Constitution require. The bill was evidently drawn so as to settle the question of the power of Congress, and yet do exact and equal justice to both carrier and shipper. Instead of meeting with opposition, it should have not only met with the approval of the carrier, but it should have been warmly welcomed. No provisions should have been made for reasonable and remunerative rates, but it should have simply provided for the fixing of the rate, for Congress is under no obligations to fix a reasonable or remunerative rate.

There is no question but what, from the authorities, so much of the legislation as attempts to prevent the carrier from defending any proceedings brought to enforce compliance with the order of the Commission is unconstitutional; that, however, would not in any manner affect the bill, for that could be stricken out by the court without injury to the bill. Defense of unconstitutionality could be raised in criminal proceedings and in any proceedings brought to enforce the orders of the Commission, and a court of equity would certainly disregard such a provision. The question of parties defendant would be presented when attempts were made to enforce the orders. Those who were active in enforcing the orders would be the parties liable. Therefore no embarrassment would arise if Congress fixed the rate, leaving to the Commission the duty of bringing about the legislation pointed out and provided for, without limitations as to reasonableness or remuneration. [Applause.]

The other question involved is, How far can Congress go in depriving the courts of judicial power conferred by the Constitution?

To a proper understanding of this question it will be necessary to ascertain the extent of the power of the courts of the United States and the power of Congress over these courts. This will have to be learned from the Constitution. Believing as I do that Congress can not erect a court of equity and then deprive it of its judicial power, I shall at the outset invite attention to some cases holding that Congress can require notice to be given on an application for an injunction.

The question first arose in the case of the State of New York v. State of Connecticut (4 Dallas, 1). The case was decided at the August term, 1799.

First Statutes at Large, chapter 22, page 333, approved March 2, 1793, section 5, provided that no writ of injunction shall be granted in any case without reasonable previous notice to the adverse party or his attorney of the time and place of moving for the same. And the court held an injunction will neither be granted by the court nor a single judge without reasonable notice to the adverse party or his attorney.

The same ruling was made in Mowrey v. Indianapolis and Chicago Railroad Company, 4 Biss., 78, 17 Federal Cases, No. 9891, page 930, where the court said:

The injunction ordered on the 28th of May was decreed without much consideration on my part. I followed a practice which has long prevailed in the courts of the State of Indiana. But, on further reflection, I think my order for a temporary injunction was premature. Equity would seem to demand that, in cases of emergency, where irreparable injury would follow unless an immediate injunction were ordered, the national courts should have power to grant temporary injunctions without notice of the application for them to the party enjoined. But the act of Congress of March 2, 1793, forbids that any writ of injunction shall "be granted in any case without reasonable previous notice to the adverse party, or his attorney, of the time and place of moving for the same." (1 Stat., 335.)

In view of this act, as well as of the fifty-fifth rule in equity of the Supreme Court, it should seem that no special injunction can be granted by this court but on due notice. And in the case of New York v. Connecticut, 4 Dall. (4 U. S.), 1, the Supreme Court has decided that an injunction can neither be granted by the United States courts nor any judge thereof without due notice to the adverse party or his attorney. I, therefore, dissolve the injunction ordered on the 28th of May.

The same ruling was made by Mr. Justice Daniel, when holding court in the State of Arkansas in 1855, in the case of Wynn v. Wilson Hempst (698, 30 Federal Cases, No. 18116, p. 751).

The constitutional question now involved was not raised, therefore not considered in these cases.

The material provisions of the Constitution are as follows:

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives. (Article I, section 1.)

The Congress shall have power to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court. (Article I, section 8, subdivision 9.)

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. * * * (Article III, section 1.)

The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States, between a State and citizens of another State, between citizens of different States, between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State or the citizens thereof and foreign states, citizens, or subjects.

In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make. (Article III, section 2.)

It will be important and necessary to understand what is meant by the words "judicial power." Much has been written in defining the meaning of the same. Many writers agree that it is authority to hear and determine rights between persons, and the State and persons.

Mr. Justice Miller, very carefully considering this subject in his valuable work on the Constitution, page 314, in part said:

It will not do to answer that it is the power exercised by the courts, because one of the very things to be determined is what power they may exercise. It is indeed very difficult to find any exact definition made to hand.

But he comes to this conclusion:

It is the power of a court to decide and pronounce a judgment and carry it into effect between persons and parties who bring a case before it for decision.

The entire constitutional provision on this subject might just as well be considered together. Mr. Justice Story said:

That the enumerated power found in Article I, section 8, subdivision 9, is but a repetition of what is contained in Article III. The framers of the Constitution not only provided a judiciary, but declared that the national judiciary ought to possess powers coextensive with those of the legislative department. (Journal of Convention, 69, 98, 121, 137, 186, 188, 189, 212; Federalist, Nos. 77, 78; 2 Elliot's Debates, 380, 394, 404.)

This branch of the subject can be better understood by referring to the leading case of Martin v. Hunter (1 Wheat., 304), in an opinion rendered by Mr. Justice Story in 1816. After discussing the constitutional provisions herein cited, the learned jurist said:

> Such is the language of the article creating and defining the judicial power of the United States. It is the voice of the whole American people, solemnly declared in establishing one great department of that Government which was in many respects national and in all supreme. It is a part of the very same instrument which was to act, not merely upon individuals, but upon States; and to deprive them altogether of the exercise of some powers of sovereignty and to restrain and regulate them in the exercise of others.

Let this article be carefully weighed and considered. The language of the article throughout is manifestly designed to be mandatory upon the legislature. Its obligatory force is so imperative that Congress could not, without violation of its duty, have refused to carry it into operation. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested (not "may be vested") in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as Congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish. Could Congress have lawfully refused to create a Supreme Court, or to vest in it the constitutional jurisdiction? "The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office." Could Congress create or limit any other tenure of the judicial office? Could they refuse to pay, at stated times, the stipulated salary, or diminish it during the continuance in office? But one answer can be given to these questions. It must be in the negative. The object of the Constitution was to establish three great departments of government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial departments. The first was to pass laws, the second to approve and execute them, and the third to expound and enforce them. Without the latter it would be impossible to carry into effect some of the express provisions of the Constitution. How, otherwise, could crimes against the United States be tried and punished? How could causes between two States be heard and determined? The judicial power must therefore be vested in some court by Congress, and to suppose that it was not an obligation binding on them, but might, at their pleasure, be omitted or declined, is to suppose that under the sanction of the Constitution they might defeat the Constitution itself. A construction which would lead to such a result can not be sound.

The same expression "shall be vested" occurs in other parts of the Constitution, in defining the powers of the other coordinate branches of the Government. The first article declares that "all legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States." Will it be contended that the legislative power is not absolutely vested? That the words merely refer to some future act, and mean only that the legislative power may hereafter be vested? The second article declares that "the executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America." Could Congress vest it in any other person, or is it to await their good pleasure, whether it is to vest at all? It is apparent that such a construction, in either case, would be utterly inadmissable. Why, then, is it entitled to a better support in reference to the judicial department?

If, then, it is a duty of Congress to vest the judicial power of the United States, it is a duty to vest the whole judicial power. The language, if imperative as to one part, is imperative as to all. If it were otherwise, this anomaly would exist, that Congress might successively refuse to vest the jurisdiction in any one class of cases enumerated in the Constitution, and thereby defeat the jurisdiction as to all, for the Constitution has not singled out any class on which Congress are bound to act in preference to others.

The next consideration is as to the courts in which the judicial power shall be vested. It is manifest that a supreme court must be established; but whether it be equally obligatory to establish inferior courts is a question of some difficulty. If Congress may lawfully omit to establish inferior courts it might follow that in some of the enumerated cases the judicial power could nowhere exist. The Supreme Court can have original jurisdiction in two classes only, viz, in cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and in cases in which a State is a party. Congress can not vest any portion of the judicial power of the United States except in courts ordained and established by itself, and if in any of the cases enumerated in the Constitution the State courts did not then possess jurisdiction, the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court—admitting that it could act on State courts—could not reach those cases, and consequently the injunction of the Constitution that the judicial power "shall be vested" would be disobeyed. It would seem, therefore, to follow that Congress are bound to create some inferior courts in which to vest all that jurisdiction which, under the Constitution, is exclusively vested in the United States and of which the Supreme Court can not take original cognizance. They might establish one or more inferior courts; they might parcel out the jurisdiction among such courts from time to time at their own pleasure, but the whole judicial power of the United States should be, at all times, vested, either in an original or appellate form, in some courts created under its authority.

This construction will be fortified by an attentive examination of the second section of the third article. The words are, "The judicial power shall extend," etc. Much minute and elaborate criticism has been employed upon these words. It has been argued that they are equivalent to the words "may extend," and that "extend" means to widen to new cases not before within the scope of the power. For the reasons which have been already stated, we are of opinion that the words are used in an imperative sense; they import an absolute grant of judicial power. They can not have a relative signification applicable to powers already granted, for the American people had not made any previous grant. The Constitution was for a new government, organized with new substantive powers, and not a mere supplementary charter to a government already existing. The confederation was a compact between States; and its structure and powers were wholly unlike those of the National Government. The Constitution was an act of the people of the United States to supersede the confederation, and not to be ingrafted on it, as a stock through which it was to receive life and nourishment.

If, indeed, the relative signification could be fixed upon the term "extend" it could not (as we shall hereafter see) subserve the purposes of the argument in support of which it has been adduced. This imperative sense of the words "shall extend" is strengthened by the context. It is declared that "in all cases affecting ambassadors, etc., the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction." Could Congress withhold original jurisdiction in these cases from the Supreme Court? The clause proceeds: "In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make." The very exception here shows that the framers of the Constitution used the words in an imperative sense. What necessity could there exist for this exception if the preceding words were not used in that sense? Without such exception Congress would, by the preceding words, have possessed a complete power to regulate the appellate jurisdiction, if the language were only equivalent to the words "may have" appellate jurisdiction. It is apparent, then, that the exception was intended as a limitation upon the preceding words to enable Congress to regulate and restrain the appellate power as the public interests might from time to time require.

Other clauses in the Constitution might be brought in aid of this construction, but a minute examination of them can not be necessary, and would occupy too much time. It will be found that whenever a particular object is to be effected the language of the Constitution is always imperative and can not be disregarded without violating the first principles of public duty. On the other hand, the legislative powers are given in language which implies discretion, as from the nature of legislative power such a discretion must ever be exercised.

It being, then, established that the language of this clause is imperative, the question is as to the cases to which it shall apply. The answer is found in the Constitution itself. The judicial power shall extend to all the cases enumerated in the Constitution. As the mode is not limited, it may extend to all such cases, in any form in which judicial power may be exercised. It may therefore extend to them in the shape of original or appellate jurisdiction, or both, for there is nothing in the nature of the cases which binds to the exercises of the one in preference to the other.

In what cases, if any, is this judicial power exclusive, or exclusive at the election of Congress? It will be observed that there are two classes of cases enumerated in the Constitution, between which a distinction seems to be drawn. The first class includes cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States; cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. In this class the expression is that the judicial power shall extend to all cases; but in the subsequent part of the clause, which embraces all the other cases of national cognizance, and forms the second class, the word "all" is dropped, seemingly ex industria. Here the judicial authority is to extend to controversies (not to all controversies) to which the United States shall be a party, etc. From this difference of phraseology, perhaps, a difference of constitutional intention may with propriety be inferred. It is hardly to be presumed that the variation in the language could have been accidental. It must have been the result of some determinate reason; and it is not very difficult to find a reason sufficient to support the apparent change of intention. In respect to the first class, it may well have been the intention of the framers of the Constitution imperatively to extend the judicial power, either in an original or appellate form, to all cases; and in the latter class to leave it to Congress to qualify the jurisdiction, original or appellate, in such manner as public policy might dictate.

It is useless to spend time trying to establish a line of demarcation between jurisdiction and judicial power. The Constitution calls it judicial power and says:

This authority to hear and determine rights between persons and between persons and their governments shall be vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may ordain and establish, and shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution.

It will simplify matters to state a few unanswerable propositions. The Supreme Court is created by the Constitution; the inferior courts by Congress, by authority of the Constitution, with a limitation and a duty. It is the duty of Congress to create a court or courts with powers coextensive with those of the legislative department, in which every person can have any legal or equitable right arising under the Constitution protected.

If more than one court is ordained and established, it is for Congress to say what causes, case, subject-matter, or rights each inferior court shall take cognizance to decide and determine. In other words, what is commonly known as and called "jurisdiction of the cause." But when the particular court is given jurisdiction of the particular cause, the court can exercise over this cause full judicial power at law or in equity, and it would be not only unconstitutional, but revolutionary for Congress to attempt to deprive the particular court of judicial power over the cause it has been given jurisdiction over; that is, one court may have judicial power over all cases at law; another may have judicial power over all cases in equity; another may have judicial power over all criminal cases; another judicial power over all cases in bankruptcy, and anything short of this would be a denial by Congress of rights the people are entitled to, provided for in the Constitution. As the Constitution could not erect the inferior courts and provide judicial power for each, the authority for it was given to Congress with the expectation that it would be exercised; and when the inferior court is ordained and established there is vested in it by the Constitution judicial power at law or in equity without any limitation, and there is not a line or word in the Constitution that will justify the thought that Congress can take from a court any judicial power at law or in equity over any cause placed by Congress within its judicial power.

In other words, Congress names the subject over which the court shall exercise judicial power, but the Constitution fixes the extent of the judicial power, and Congress can not limit or impair it. If Congress could in one particular, it could in more or in all, and we would have an equitable case confided to a court that could not, by an act of Congress, exercise equitable power and try and determine the case according to equitable rules. It would be revolutionary in Congress to fail or refuse to ordain and establish a court or courts to exercise all judicial power conferred by the Constitution. And when the court or courts have been ordained and established and the subjects separated and assigned to each court, Congress can not interfere and limit the judicial power of the courts, for, as Justice Story said, "It is the duty of Congress to vest the whole judicial power." Take away the power of the court to issue a writ of injunction when the moving papers disclose a case of absolute emergency and it may prevent a complainant from recovering what he is legally and equitably entitled to, and the whole judicial power would not be vested in the courts. If a court can be prevented from issuing a writ of injunction without previous notice—ten days' notice may be required—and the court may be prevented from issuing an injunction in any case. A right to an injunction in a proper case is a constitutional right, and it is a constitutional right that it should issue whenever it is made to appear that irreparable injury will follow a failure to have an immediate injunction.

The right to issue an injunction in a proper case is a part of the judicial power of the United States. All legislative power is not conferred upon Congress; only such legislative power as is granted in the Constitution—that is, if there is a legislative power in the Constitution it must be exercised by Congress—and as far as this judicial question is concerned the only legislative power is to ordain and establish a court or courts that can exercise all judicial power of the United States and not to take from the courts a power to exercise judicial power over a case confided to it.

In Riggs v. Johnson County (6 Wall., 166) the court said:

Process subsequent to judgment is as essential to jurisdiction as process antecedent to judgment, else the judicial power would be incomplete and entirely inadequate to the purposes for which it was conferred by the Constitution.

And in the same case the court further said:

Authority of the circuit courts to issue process of any kind which is necessary to the exercise of jurisdiction and agreeable to the principles and usages of law is beyond question.

In other words, Congress can not deprive a court of judicial power over a subject or case if the subject or case is placed within the judicial power of the court by Congress, as in cases removed by act of Congress from State courts to Federal courts. Congress, in the discharge of its constitutional duty, has provided for the removal of a certain class of cases, and, when removed, Congress can not prevent the court from exercising all judicial power, except by abolishing the court.

If Congress can prevent the issuing of an injunction in a proper case without notice, Congress can prevent the issuing of an injunction in any case. A citizen of a State may derive his right from a State law and may attempt to enforce his right in a State court. It may be a proper case for removal to the Federal court, and either party may find it necessary, in order to protect their rights, to have an injunction. It certainly would be unjust to any litigant to deprive him of the right to an injunction in the Federal court.

To advocate taking away power from courts of equity and preventing a person from obtaining certain rights from the court is to concede that same person has a right to the protection of such power, and it is a step toward anarchy to suggest that a person shall be denied his constitutional rights in a court created by the Constitution to aid him to obtain his constitutional rights.

As far as Congress can operate through and by the Commission in fixing rates, we will probably all agree that Congress can not delegate legislative power; but, on the other hand, it is held, when a statute acts on a subject as far as practicable and only leaves to executive officers the duty of bringing about the legislation pointed out and provided for, it is not unconstitutional, as vesting executive officials with legislative power. (Field v. Clark, 143 U. S., 649; Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S., 470.) [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNON].

Mr. BANNON. Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said in the House on the subject of the removal of the duty now imposed upon the hides of cattle both by the advocates of such removal and those opposing it. Those speaking on the subject so far have spoken largely in a general way, and inasmuch as I have collected some special figures and facts concerning this question, I take this occasion of presenting them, in the hope that I may be able to add something, at least, to the information and knowledge desired both by the Members of this House and the country at large upon this important subject.

THE CRY FOR "FREE HIDES" IS MISLEADING.

The term "free hides" is misleading in itself, because the only raw hides which may be used in the manufacture of shoes, harness, saddlery, and other leather articles that are dutiable are the hides of cattle. Many other raw hides are used largely in the manufacture of shoes, such as horsehides and goat, sheep, kangaroo, and calf skins. These are now admitted free of duty. A calfskin is distinguished from cattle hide by its weight, all green salted weighing 25 pounds or less and all dry weighing 12 pounds or less being designated as calfskins, and all over as cattle hides. Paragraph 437 of the Dingley law reads as follows:

Hides of cattle, raw or uncured, whether dry, salted, or pickled, 15 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That upon all leather exported, made from imported hides, there shall be allowed a drawback equal to the amount of duty paid on such hides.

It will thus be seen at the outset of this discussion that we do not have to deal with the question of free hides generally, but simply with the question of the raw hides of cattle.

The following table gives the imports of hides for the year ending with December, 1905:

Article.	Quantities.	Values.
Hides and skins, other than fur skins:	Pounds.
Goatskins.....free..	102,940,811	$28,506,937
Hides of cattle.....dutiable..	137,612,380	18,384,650
All other.....free..	141,587,241	26,505,831
Total.....	382,140,412	73,397,418

These statistics show that the total value of all hides and skins, other than fur skins, imported during the year ending December 31, 1905, was $73,397,418, and that the value of hides of cattle imported in 1905 was $18,384,650, and, consequently, the value of hides imported free of duty for 1905 amounted to $55,012,768, so that approximately in value three-fourths of the hides now imported are admitted free of duty.

The common impression prevailing is that all raw hides imported into this country bear a tariff of 15 per cent ad valorem, and this impression has undoubtedly been created by the expression "free hides," so often used in discussing this subject and in the public press.

HISTORY OF TARIFF ON HIDES.

The first tariff imposed on raw hides was in 1842, when a tariff of 5 per cent was levied. This was reduced in 1857 to 4 per cent, but again raised in March, 1861, to 5 per cent. In December, 1861, this tariff on hides was again increased to 10 per cent, and remained at this figure until 1873, at which time the duty on hides was entirely removed and they were admitted free until the enactment of the Dingley bill in 1897, by the terms of which, as we have seen, the tariff upon certain hides was fixed at 15 per cent.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee why it is that only hides of the larger weight are made dutiable and the others are admitted free of duty?

Mr. BANNON. I do not see how that is germane to the question. I might say for the benefit of the gentleman, however, that it is largely due to the agricultural and industrial conditions existing in this country. Here we have good opportunities for the grazing of cattle, and we do not have to sell calves when they are young, but having a large area of grazing lands we can let our cattle graze on these lands and grow into money. That is due to the agricultural conditions. Our principal product in this line is the cattle and not the calves. In the next place, the Republican policy of protection has given a market to the farmer that is surpassed by no market in the world. His great market consists of the wage-earners in our industries. The farmer can get good prices for what he raises on his farm because our labor is employed, and he does not have to sell his calves when they are young, but he can afford to keep them and get the additional profit.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is it not true in that connection that stock that are slaughtered by farmers themselves are usually of the lighter weights, and that the hides of the greater weight come from the cattle that are sold to the beef trust and packing houses?

Mr. BANNON. I think not. But I will come to that question later on.

THE TARIFF ON CATTLE HIDES NOT THE CAUSE OF HIGH PRICE OF LEATHER.

Some of the shoe manufacturers are now complaining of this duty, and inasmuch as they are objecting to it, the reason of their complaint must be found in the fact that the price of leather has been to some extent, in their opinion, increased by virtue of this tariff. The hides of cattle are the most valuable by-product of such animals, and if the price of hides is increased by virtue of this tariff, then, of course, the value of this important by-product of these animals has been affected by it.

In 1890 there were in the United States 52,801,907 head of cattle. In 1900 there were in the United States but 43,902,414 head of cattle. The reason of this decrease is readily accounted for by the fact that during the financial and industrial depression existing from 1893 to 1897 labor in this country was generally unemployed and was without the means to purchase largely of meat, which necessarily limited the demand for cattle, causing a consequent limiting of the supply. In 1905, after nine years of Republican administration (during which time the industries of this country have again been opened to our people, thereby creating a demand for the products from the farm, which was necessarily followed by an increase in the supply of cattle), we find that there are in this country 61,241,907 head of cattle; and if the tariff does increase the price of raw hides, then the value of each one of these head of cattle has been increased and the farmers of this country owning them have received the benefit.

The duty on hides not only adds value to the cattle owned by the farmers, but it also produces a large sum of revenue for the support of the General Government, the amount of the duties collected on such hides for the year 1905 being $2,757,697.

When we examine this question further, we find that raw hides are divided into two classes, one being known as the dry hides and the other as the green hides, and that it is the dry hides principally that are imported, and consequently it is with such hides that we must now deal in computing how much the tariff would amount to in a pair of shoes, acting upon the assumption that the tariff of 15 per cent adds that much in value to all the leather produced in this country. Personally, I do not think the duty of 15 per cent on imported raw cattle hides affects appreciably the price of leather. It may affect the price of hides, but not to a greater extent than 15 per cent, and the price of hides has increased much more than this. It is true that at the present time the price of leather is extraordinarily high, but this is due to the unprecedented demand caused by the wonderful increase in its use. Leather is being now more generally used than ever before.

The extensive construction of automobiles alone furnishes an example, for in each of the thousands of these machines now in use from two to three hides were used in the leather fittings. During the last few years a greater variety and number of articles are being made from leather than formerly, and the demand for these articles has been phenomenal. In 1900 the saddlery and harness products of this country increased in value 18.2 per cent over those manufactured in 1890; pocketbooks, trunks, and valises, 43 per cent; leather belting and hose, 23 per cent; and leather, tanned, curried, and finished, 18.5 per cent. Naturally this extraordinary increase in the manufacture of leather goods has caused a greater demand for leather, thereby increasing both the price of leather and hides. The supply of hides and the demand for them regulate the price and cause it to fluctuate. While the price of hides is now double what it was in 1894, yet between the latter half of 1902 and the first half of 1904 the reduction was 18½ per cent. That the 15 per cent duty on raw cattle hides is not the cause of the present high price of leather and hides is proven conclusively by the fact that the price of calfskins, which are on the free list, has also increased proportionately with those of cattle.

In considering this question there is another fact that should not be overlooked, and that is the heavy exports of hides. The quantity exported for 1904 was two and one-half times greater than the quantity exported in 1903. Our annual export of hides is as follows:

Export of hides.

Year.	Pounds.	Value.
1905	10,268,722	$1,051,641
1904	32,727,643	3,246,887

Such a heavy demand for our hides from foreign countries during the past two years will admit of two deductions: First, the prices here are not unreasonable when compared with prices in foreign markets. Were it otherwise these hides would not be sold to the foreign trade. Second, this extraordinary demand, created in a large measure by the Russo-Japanese war, is one of the controlling factors fixing the present price. It is far more logical to attribute the high price to this cause and the others I have enumerated rather than the 15 per cent duty, but it is the combination of all these causes that has produced present prices. The demand is great and the supply not adequate. The same causes exist in free-trade England. Consul Hamm, of Hull, in the Daily Consular and Trade Reports for March 31, 1906, says:

> The advance in cost of hides and leather in England, it is asserted, was caused by the heavy war demands. The South African war and the Russo-Japanese war are said to have created a famine in hides and leather of all descriptions. Reserves of leather throughout the world have been nearly exhausted, and the tanneries, many of which were out of operation, will need a long time to regain business.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. It is the gentleman's contention then that the tariff on these hides enhances the price of the hides?

Mr. BANNON. Not to a greater extent than 15 per cent.

Mr. SIMS. Did I not understand the gentleman to say that the smaller hides, the calf hides, had advanced just as much as the others?

Mr. BANNON. Yes; proportionately.

Mr. SIMS. Then how does the gentleman conclude that the tariff on the heavier hides makes them advance, whereas the others, without the tariff, advance as much?

Mr. BANNON. The price of calfskins has not advanced exactly to a cent as much as other hides. I said proportionately. Approximately might have been better.

Mr. SIMS. I understood the gentleman to say it was the same.

Mr. BANNON. The gentleman is confusing the difference between leather and hides. I do not think the tariff on hides increases appreciably the price of leather.

In the same report he also says:

As the high price of hides prevails in free-trade England, as well as in protection America, there must be some other cause than the tariff that produces these high prices. The manufacture of boots and shoes is also prosperous in America, while in England it is depressed.

This is evidence of the highest character that present prices are not due to the tariff.

Leicester is the great center of boot and shoe manufacture in England, as Brockton and Lynn are in Massachusetts. A correspondent of the Yorkshire Post sums up the situation in that city as follows:

The great scarcity of all descriptions of leather suitable for boot and shoe manufacture has brought about an acute crisis in the trade, and very heavy losses have been suffered. Manufacturers who had booked large orders for delivery in March and April now find that it is impossible to secure adequate supplies of leather, and what they do secure can only be purchased at a great advance in prices. It is impossible to meet the contracts placed except at a very heavy loss, and the position has become so bad that large manufacturers declare that nothing like it has been experienced for fifty years. Manufacturers are compelled to appeal to buyers to revise prices and to pay enhanced rates on the orders already placed. Where this is done manufacturers will be able to tide over their difficulties, but where buyers insist upon deliveries in accordance with the terms of their contracts enormous losses will be suffered.

Surely the tariff levied by the United States on imported cattle hides can not be said to be the cause of the scarcity of leather in Leicester, for it is well known that England levies no such tariff, yet the conditions are more acute there than here.

The following table shows the average wholesale prices of sole leather and hides from 1890 to 1905:

Average annual wholesale prices of leather and hides, 1890 to 1905.

Year.	Leather.		Green salted, packers' heavy native steer hides (price per pound in Chicago).
	Sole, hemlock, Buenos Ayres, middle weights, first quality (price per pound).	Sole, oak, scoured backs, heavy (price per pound).

1904	.2258	.3450	.1166
1905	.2290	.3663	.1430

The figures disclosed by this table are interesting. The price of green salted hides in 1890 is shown to be $0.0933, while the average price of oak sole leather for the same year is $0.3771. In 1905, with the price of hides about 5 cents per pound more than they were in 1890, we find the price of oak sole leather to be about 1 cent per pound less than it was in 1890. The average price of green salted hides in 1894 touched the lowest point, while the price of oak soles was lowest in 1896. In other words, the price of oak soles does not seem to bear any fixed proportion or ratio to the price of hides. Because hides slightly increase in price it does not necessarily follow that leather increases in price; and this being the case, it can not be said that the small duty of 15 per cent on hides affects the prices of leather, although, as I have said, it may increase the value of the hide to that extent.

AMOUNT OF TARIFF IN LEATHER MADE FROM CATTLE HIDES.

The method of computing the amount of the tariff on raw hides used in the manufacture of leather is as follows: One hundred pounds of dry hides will produce from 150 to 185 pounds of leather, and we can safely put it at an average of 175 pounds. At the present high prices of dry hides they are worth 20 cents per pound, and if the duty has increased the price 15 per cent such increase would be 3 cents per pound, or for the 100 pounds the duty would amount to $3. This quantity of raw hide will produce 175 pounds of leather, and the duty in this quantity will, of course, be $3. If the duty on 175 pounds of leather is $3, in 1 pound of leather it is 1⅐ of a cent. At normal prices this small amount is greatly reduced. When we apply this to any particular pair of boots or shoes we find that the tariff represented therein must necessarily be very small indeed. Take, for instance, the shoes of women and children. They are not made from cattle hides, but the leather in the uppers is made from sheepskin, goatskin, and, occasionally, calfskin. The only portions of their shoes that contain any cattle hide whatever are the soles and heels, and inasmuch as the weight of these is very light, because such soles are quite thin, it will be seen that the duty represented in these soles and heels is not appreciable.

In all the higher grades of men's and boy's shoes worn in this country—and they are the ones now commonly worn—the leather in the soles and heels is also the only portion bearing any tariff, because the uppers of this grade of shoes are made of kid, calf, kangaroo, or goat skins, or horse hides; and the way to determine the amount of the tariff in such shoes is simply to take the weight of the soles and heels and multiply that by the amount of 1⅐ cents, and you have the result. It will readily be seen that it is so small it can not affect the retail price of shoes, because in no case does it exceed 2 cents per pair. The only boots and shoes made altogether from cattle hides are worn principally by the farmers, and in order to determine the amount of the tariff thereon multiply the weight of a pair of such boots or shoes by 1⅐ cents. Even in this case the amount is too small to affect the retail price; but granting that it does, the farmer raises the cattle from which the hides are taken, and when he sells them he gets the advantage of the increased price. The shoe known as "Little's brogan" is worn largely by the farmer. It is made from cattle hides, and the weight of a pair of these shoes is 3 pounds; so the tariff represented in them can not exceed 5 cents. Different grades of these shoes retail at $1.50, $1.75, and $2 per pair. It is folly to argue that the removal of this tariff will result in these shoes being sold for $1.45, $1.70, and $1.95 per pair to the wearer. Heavy boots are no longer worn to the extent that was formerly the case, and the better grade of the brogan has largely taken their place. I am informed by extensive dealers in such boots that where twenty-five cases were sold formerly but one is sold now.

The leather required to make a double set of farm harness is about 30 pounds. The duty in it approximates 50 cents. This will not affect the retail price, but if it does, who pays it? The farmer, and he is the one who sold the hides and received the benefit.

THE FARMERS ARE PROTECTED BY THIS DUTY.

In 1902–3 the average net value of hides per head fluctuated between $6.93 and $5.79, so it will be safe to roughly estimate the average value of each hide at $6, although to-day they are worth more. This would make the hides on the 61,241,907 cattle in this country worth $367,051,442; and if removing the duty of 15 per cent from these hides reduces the price to that extent we find a loss to the farmers of this country of $45,057,716.

Last year there were slaughtered in this country 12,500,000 head of cattle, and the hides of these animals were worth at least $75,000,000. If 15 per cent of the value of these hides is to be taken away from the farmer this means an annual loss to him of at least $11,250,000.

Mr. SIMS. Right in that connection, how can it have that effect? Unless all the hides are heavy hides, they can not be affected by free trade.

Mr. BANNON. I do not think the duty affects all hides; but the manufacturers who come here asking for the removal of the duty—and they are backed in their desires by the minority—claim that the 15 per cent duty does affect all hides.

Mr. SIMS. Because you made your calculation upon that is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. BANNON. I am taking their argument and trying to answer it. If the duty increases the value of hides, removing it will decrease their value.

The tanneries in this country are protected by the levying of a tariff on all tanned or finished leather imported into this country. The shoe manufacturers of America are protected by a tariff on foreign-made shoes. The manufacturers of harness and saddles receive the benefit of a protective tariff. So do the manufacturers of leather trunks and valises. These industries have grown wonderfully in America, the total production of leather manufactures having increased from $109,734,643 in 1850 to $615,720,395 in 1890, or about sixfold, our population during the same period of time having increased about three and one-quarter fold. The average number of wage-earners employed daily in 1900 in these industries was 251,920, to whom was paid during that year $105,571,000 in wages. This magnificent showing is a result of the Republican policy of protection to these industries; and, having prospered as they have, complaint should not now be made by them because the American farmer, who is the greatest and best consumer of these products, likewise enjoys the benefit of a protective tariff upon the hides of the cattle raised by his labor, thrift, and economy. The Republican party enacted the law which afforded this protection to the farmer and its Representatives in Congress are entitled to their support. [Applause.]

There can be no question but that the farmer gets the benefit of this protection. Advocates of free raw cattle hides maintain that he does not get this benefit, but that the so-called "beef trust" does. Their contention gives little credit to the intelligence of the farmer. To come to this conclusion they are forced to assume that the hides of cattle are such an unimportant by-product and of such little value that they are not taken into consideration in fixing the price of cattle.

Let us see about that. On September 13, 1905, Swift & Co. made a test of the cost, expense of handling, dressing, and selling an average lot of eighteen steers. These animals weighed 23,080 pounds, and cost, at $3.60 per hundredweight, $830.88. The hides taken from them weighed 1,288 pounds, and were sold for $172.10. The value of the hides was equal to one-fifth of the cost of the cattle. This is almost invariably the case. The farmer knows that. He knows that the hide is one-fifth of the value of his animal; and if that hide is protected by a duty of 15 per cent he gets the benefit. If that duty is removed, upon him must fall the loss, and there will be no resulting benefit to the retail buyer of shoes, harness, and other leather articles.

MASSACHUSETTS HAS NO CAUSE TO COMPLAIN.

The State of Massachusetts by the census of 1900 is reported to be the first in rank in every item relating to shoe manufacture, having produced 44.9 per cent of the total output of boots and shoes for the entire country during that year, and, consequently, some of the Representatives in Congress from that State have been industrious and persistent in their advocacy for the removal of the duty from raw hides of cattle.

During the decade between 1890 and 1900 the State of Ohio, which I have the honor to represent in part, made a notable advance in the production of shoes, passing from the seventh rank to that of fourth; and the prosperous city of Portsmouth, in which I reside, advanced in the manufacture of shoes from a rank so apparently unimportant in 1890 that it was not reported at all by the Census Bureau to that of eighteenth in the cities and towns of the United States; and the manufacture of shoes in that city is conducted upon such a sound financial basis and by such careful, considerate, and able employers and faithful, capable, and industrious employees that I believe the next decade will see the position of that city again materially advanced.

With reference to Massachusetts, the United States Bureau of the Census on April 16, 1906, issued a preliminary summary of the census of manufactures of Massachusetts for 1905, and the following is a table showing a comparison of the boot and shoe industry and the leather industry of that State for the years 1900 and 1905:

Industry.	Year.	Number of establishments.	Capital.	Salaried officials, clerks, etc.
				Number	Salaries.
Boots and shoes	1905	502	$49,529,728	3,400	$3,245,029
	1900	640	37,577,630	2,546	2,487,013
Leather, tanned, curried, and finished.	1905	132	27,070,206	526	686,334
	1900	119	15,317,940	355	405,648

Industry.	Year.	Wage-earners.		Miscellaneous expenses.	Cost of materials used.	Value of products, including custom work and repairing.
		Average number.	Wages.
Boots and shoes	1905	62,633	$33,160,667	$8,340,835	$88,493,009	$144,291,426
	1900	58,645	27,745,820	4,826,896	75,751,964	117,115,243
Leather, tanned, curried, and finished.	1905	9,074	4,556,327	1,942,733	23,040,897	33,352,999
	1900	7,010	3,379,698	662,553	19,793,757	26,067,714

From an examination of this table it will be seen that the amount of capital invested, the number of salaried officials, the number of wage-earners, the amount of wages, and the value of the products have increased very materially between 1900 and 1905. It would thus seem that this industry is in a most prosperous condition, and that a steady and marked advance is being made by the manufacturers of that State in the production of leather and boots and shoes. Certainly the men of Massachusetts owning these industries are not doing business at a loss. If they are the novelty of it has appealed to them so that they are increasing the output on which they lose. It can not be said from this record that the tariff on raw cattle hides has had a depressing effect on this industry in Massachusetts.

INCREASE OF OUR FOREIGN TRADE.

Our domestic trade in leather and leather goods has not only steadily increased, but our foreign trade as well. The following table shows the exports of boots and shoes since 1891, and that such exports are steadily increasing:

Exports of boots and shoes.

Year.	Pairs.	Value.
1905	5,315,699	$8,057,697
1904	4,642,531	7,238,940
1903	4,197,566	6,665,017
1902	3,966,766	6,182,098
1901	3,494,041	5,526,290
1900	3,016,720	4,726,656
1899	1,934,277	2,711,385
1898	1,307,031	1,816,538
1897	1,224,484	1,708,224
1896	1,036,235	1,436,686
1895	822,412	1,010,228
1894	647,318	777,354
1893	493,027	590,754
1892	745,112	914,974
1891	551,735	651,343

Under the Wilson and McKinley bills, which left cattle hides on the free list, our exports of boots and shoes were in value, during the best year, less than one and three-quarter millions of dollars, while under the Dingley bill, with a tariff of 15 per cent ad valorem on such hides, our exports of these commodities have reached the annual value of more than $8,000,000. Certainly this tariff has not hurt our foreign trade in boots and shoes.

Our exports of leather and its manufactures have also increased, as the following table will show:

Exports of leather and manufactures of leather.

1905	$37,936,745
1904	33,980,615
1903	31,617,389
1902	29,798,323
1901	27,923,653
1900	27,293,010
1899	23,466,985
1898	21,113,640
1897	19,161,446
1896	20,242,756
1895	15,615,407
1894	14,283,492
1893	11,912,154
1892	12,084,781
1891	13,278,847

That this duty has not injuriously affected these exports is shown by the fact that they have doubled in value under the protective tariff on cattle hides, having increased from $19,000,000 in 1897 under free hides to almost $38,000,000 in 1905 under protection to cattle hides. The increase for 1905 over 1904 will compare favorably with that of any successive years in both of these industries.

Bradstreet's for March 3, 1906, says:

Foreign buying of grains, satins, and split leather is active in Boston. Hides are firmer. Foreign buyers have bought freely of salted domestic buff hides, and have paid prices declared by American tanners to be too high.

This statement naturally prompts the inquiry as to why foreigners are here buying our hides and leather and shoes if our duty of 15 per cent on a few hides increases the price of all of our supply of hides and leather to that extent, and the inquiry is a complete answer to the proposition. Great Britain admits free of duty hides and leather and the manufactures of leather. In the present condition of our foreign shipping Great Britain's facilities for importing hides are far better than ours, yet she took from us last year sole leather valued at $4,449,410, and other leather valued at $11,072,078; of boots and shoes we sent to the United Kingdom $1,943,845 worth. If this duty is adding to the price appreciably, how can we sell abroad?

Those who are contending for the removal of the duty from the raw hides of cattle tell the manufacturer of leather goods that such action will give him increased profits on the output of his factory. That is done to interest him in the project, and it usually has the desired effect. They then tell the wage-earner employed in the same factory that if this tariff is removed the price of the raw material necessary to make the finished product will be decreased and the result will be that he will get an increase in his wages. Naturally that interests him. But they do not stop there; they go to the retail dealer in leather goods and tell him that his profits as a retailer will be increased if the duty is removed from raw cattle hides. But that is not all. They take another step down the line, and they tell the consumer of these commodities that he will be able to buy them at a largely reduced price if this small duty is removed. I have shown you that this duty is so small that it can not appreciably affect the retail price of commodities that are manufactured from leather. Suppose it is 5 cents per pair on brogans, this small amount can not be given to the wage-earner and the manufacturer and the retail dealer and the consumer. If you give it to one of them manifestly you can not give it to the other three; and if it is to be divided among these four classes it becomes a matter so trivial that it is not worthy of consideration, it becomes absolutely nothing to them. The inconsistency of the position of these agitators on this subject is so apparent in this regard it is not worth while to continue the discussion of it further. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

THE DEMOCRATIC DOCTRINE A MENACE TO THE FARMERS, MANUFACTURERS, AND WAGE-EARNERS.

The position of the Democratic party on this question was stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] on January 5, in a speech that is strong and instructive, reflecting, as it does, the research and ability of this able man. I quote from his remarks appearing at page 769 of the RECORD:

What do the Massachusetts Republicans want in the way of tariff reform? They want free hides, free coal, free lumber, free raw materials for their factories; but the Massachusetts tariff reformers need not conclude suddenly and prematurely that all the rest of the tariff reformers in this country are idiots. They can get free hides provided they will cut down the tariff on boots and shoes and harness and leather sufficiently, but they will not get free hides unless they do that. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Missouri support a proposition for free hides coupled with a proposition to take the duty off the products of leather?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So quick that it would make your head swim. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. At all events, then, we have a valuable ally.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You have got me right now on that. Senator LODGE, as I understand it, advocates repealing the tariff on hides, because "it is such a little one," two million and something. Now, if they will go the whole hog up there and remove the tariff on boots, shoes, and leather, we can come to an agreement and pass it through this House.

The price which the manufacturers of commodities made out of leather must pay for the removal of the duty from the raw hides of cattle is the removal of the tariff on boots, shoes, and leather. That is what the Democratic party offers them. Since that day ample time has elapsed to permit those engaged in the manufacture of leather goods to petition for the removal of the duty now levied to protect their industries.

The fact that they have not generally responded to this invitation is significant. They don't care to make the trade. In 1900 there was invested in the manufacture of leather in this country $173,977,421. The value of the product for the year was $204,038,127. The sum of $22,591,091 was paid for wages. In the same year there was invested in the boot and shoe industry $101,795,233. The value of the product was $261,028,580. and the amount of the wages paid was $59,175,883. To get free raw cattle hides we must bring these industries and the men employed in them into competition with the industrial conditions prevailing in foreign countries.

The proposition is to compel our labor to compete with foreign labor inadequately paid and denied the equal opportunities enjoyed by the American mechanic. It is not the creed of the Republican party to do that, and this position of the Democratic party only furnishes an additional reason why districts in which there are industries engaged in manufacturing leather or the articles made therefrom should return Republican Pepresentatives to the Sixtieth Congress. [Applause.] The poli ies of the Democratic party would destroy the protection thus afforded to the farmer, to the manufacturer of all articles made from leather, and to the tens of thousands of American wage-earners now employed in these industries. The policies of the Republican party will continue to protect them against the cheap labor of foreign countries and will maintain the prosperity now so generally enjoyed by our people. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FLOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, on the 25th of April the House had the pleasure of listening to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

His splendid rhetorical effort on the merchant marine appeared May 4, and occupied thirty-six pages of the RECORD.

The gentleman has been giving much of his time for many years to the question of ship subsidy, and so far as the advocacy of this species of class legislation is concerned he is perhaps the best authority to-day in Congress. Aside from this, he is noted as an adroit debater and an able advocate, so that what he says on any subject, and particularly on this much-discussed question, is entitled to consideration. As the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine of Congress and a prominent member of the Merchant Marine Commission, appointed early in 1904, that took testimony in eighteen of the leading cities of the country, his views demand more than ordinary attention from the Members of this House. He is very frank in his opening, and I shall give the paragraph entire, so that you may realize just what he proposes in this matter:

Mr. Chairman, I propose to address the House this morning on the topic of the ship-subsidy bill, a topic that is usually discussed with a great deal of interest pending campaigns before the country, and about which very little interest is manifested after the election. The language that is used ordinarily by the candidate for President, the party platform, the campaign speakers, and the candidates for Congress who are running before the people is to announce that they are in favor of "encouraging" the building of ships. I embrace this opportunity to announce that the time for "encouragement" has passed and the time for assistance is now here. It will not answer in the future for any political party or any candidate for any office to mislead his hearers by the use of the word "encourage."

Encouragement is a dead letter, and the American people who favor some action in behalf of this great measure now demand that the friends of the measure shall cooperate to assist, and "encouragement" will be hereafter ruled out in party platforms and in inaugural addresses and in messages to Congress and in solicitation for support by industrial forces of the United States.

You will notice that he calls it a subsidy and drops the usual word "encourage," and boldly asks for assistance for this infant industry, now more than one hundred years old in this country. He begins his argument when the more diplomatic advocates for a ship subsidy end their pleas for assistance. [Applause.]

The money of the country is too profitably employed now to enter the field of shipbuilding.

When every argument of the ship-subsidy advocates is destroyed they bob up with their last and greatest, that we must have an auxiliary fleet and that ships under American registry can only supply this need. I like the statement of the Merchants' Association of New York, and I shall quote an extract of the reply sent March 5, 1906, by George L. Duval, chairman of the ship subsidies and shipping committee, to the inquiries from my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER]:

Whatever aid is accorded by the Government to the development of the shipbuilding industry should be in the nature of a tax upon the entire body politic, because the subsidy proposed can not be defended as an aid to commerce, but only as assistant to a necessary adjunct in the national defense.

If ever an admission against a special interest was well stated, it is found in the above paragraph.

It is not our duty to build ships which may be used as an aid to war vessels, and to claim that they can be used as freighters. A ship to be a good freighter must have a maximum amount of hold, with a minimum waste for storage of coal. In other words, it is bound to be a slow ship. In battle a ship must be able to strike quickly, get away quickly, maneuver quickly, and be ready to strike again.

I read from Doctor Meeker's work, an expert authority on this subject, pages 215–216:

The policy of giving extra admiralty subventions to vessels convertible into cruisers in case of war is followed by England. The results are not satisfactory. Vessels built after admiralty plans are neither good merchant vessels in peace nor good cruisers in war. The coal bunkers and machinery take up too much room for a merchant steamer. They are too slow to run away from the very swift vessels built solely for cruising and too light to fight. The British board of admiralty reported in 1902 that the amounts already spent in admiralty subventions were practically wasted and recommended that these payments be discontinued. War vessels are so highly specialized now that a merchant vessel can not economically be made over into a naval auxiliary. Fast steamers built solely for commercial purposes make far better transport ships than do the convertible cruisers. The use of the vessels of the American Line as cruisers during the Spanish-American war did not furnish any evidence tending to modify these views. To expend large sums of money in creating a fleet of inferior merchant vessels capable of being converted into fourth-rate cruisers is neither economical nor politic. It is better, then, to have the mail steamers built solely for commercial ends. In any case the postal and admiralty subventions have no connection with building up the general merchant marine.

The necessity for subsidizing our ocean-going tonnage in order to train up recruits for our Navy is not pressing. The people interested in subsidy measures overlook the fact that the United States ranks next to Great Britain in tonnage of shipping to-day, and has ranked second from the beginning of the nineteenth century. In ocean tonnage engaged in foreign trade we rank third, close after Germany. It is asserted that subsidies to our fisheries are especially desirable, as most of the marines and sailors employed on our naval vessels come from the fishing vessels. If this is really the fact, perhaps the fishing bounties are justifiable. But, so far as technical skill is concerned, a fisherman is no better instructed in the kind of labor required on board a war vessel than is a canal boatman. The idea that a large ocean-going marine is needed to strengthen our Navy in time of war is utterly fallacious. A large merchant marine is in time of war a source of weakness, not of strength. Nobody takes seriously the provisions of the treaty of Paris declaring the shipping of an enemy to be neutral in time of war. Merchant vessels must be protected against the cruisers of an enemy, thus subtracting from the available force of the fighting navy.

Unless the argument as freight carriers is thrown aside, the ships proposed to be built from public funds can not have speed and carrying capacity combined. The two ideas are incompatible. In the case of passenger steamers there is some plausible pretext permissible; but the advocates of this bill have thought it wise not to ask the taxpayers of the country to give up their money in order to make passengers go to Europe quickly, and it is inconceivable to believe that we want to import laborers at reduced rates of passage to compete with our workingmen, so that we can drop the argument for passenger steamers, and freight steamers are useless as auxiliary to our naval force, or even as transports, which should be swift-going vessels. The lesson of the Russian defeat is not lost on us. Among the many causes that brought it about, the lack of homogenity of the Russian ships was not the least. The slowest ship sets the pace for the squadron, and in any battle a weak ship is the opening for a clever attack, so that the proposed ship-subsidy advocates, if successful to force our freighters on our men-of-war, would be aiding and abetting the enemies of our country in its hour of need, for these ships would be neither fish nor fowl nor good red herring.

My opposition to any form of ship subsidies is based on the Golden Rule, on the teachings of the Sermon on the Mount, as well as on the modern enunciation of this cardinal truth of "Equal rights to all, special privileges to none," in Jefferson's words, so tersely restated by our great President, who proclaims himself in favor of "A square deal to every man; no more, no less."

How can "a square deal" be reconciled to a bounty wrung from the public; paid for by every man, woman, and child in the country? A bounty is a tax levied on the public to accomplish some uneconomic need. In its ultimate analysis it is another attempt to raise ourselves by our bootstraps if successful, and in the meantime to tax the whole community for the benefit of a few. We start out by paying a few millions a year to help the shipping business by taking "the money from the Treasury not otherwise provided for," yet we know that this is wrung from the people by indirect taxation of the most severe and relentless kind. Every time some poor woman in my district buys cloth for a dress, or a man buys a hat or smokes a pipe, some portion of their earnings have been diverted by devious means of indirect taxation to swell the funds of the public not needed for the expenses of the Government. This has been going on at so monstrous a rate that formerly we had a surplus in which every trust and every protected industry tried to stick its nose and partake of the Government pap.

How shallow and maladroit, how insincere is its belated appeal to moral ideas in this ship bounty business when it wants to spend other people's money on the pretext, mind you, for it is only a pretext, that our flag should fly at the main truck of our sea-borne commerce. In a few moments I shall take up the argument of the contradiction involved in paying other people's money to encourage ship building and show how incompatible it is with the claim for a ship subsidy to further ocean carrying. I shall read a clever exposition of the fundamentals from Doctor Meeker's history of shipping subsidies, in his testimony before the Industrial Commission in 1899:

> Experience has shown that if a new country possesses superior advantages capital from outside is ever likely to be attracted there in order to take advantage of the opportunities offered rather than to attempt the destruction of newly founded industries by destructive competition from a distance. These considerations make it advisable to avoid granting bounties, even were it possible to show that, if properly administered, a net gain would result.
> The critical objections of the free trader, though having an economic bearing, are primarily political and ethical in character. They come up like the lean kine in Pharaoh's dream and devour the fat, sleek, prosperity-promising kine of the protectionist. Nevertheless, there remains the theoretical possibility that state aid to young industries may, under certain conditions and with right direction, accelerate the increase in national wealth. Given these economic conditions, which are said to exist very often, and the only assumption necessary is a government by men of knowledge, honesty, and power.
> But if the political and ethical evils of protection were not sufficient to condemn it, there are good reasons for thinking that the shipbuilding industry in the United States does not conform to the conditions of an infant industry. For several years steel plates, beams, and angles have been produced in the United States more cheaply than anywhere else, so that a bounty is scarcely needed to develop our infant steel industry. It does not necessarily follow from this that ships can be built in the United States more cheaply than in England or Germany. According to the commissioner of navigation, the steel and other material going into a steel steamship constitute only about one-fourth of the entire cost. The costs of assembling and finishing are then by far the more important elements in the final cost of a ship.
> We must not be too hasty in accepting these statements, however, for they come from an ardent devotee of the subsidy policy. The present commissioner was formerly very much opposed to subsidies and furnished statistics in 1894 proving conclusively that steel ships could be built as cheaply in the United States as in England. Since 1898 he has been engaged in figuring out the exact amount of subsidy necessary to overcome the higher costs of construction and navigation under the American flag. The estimates of these differences in costs have diminished in amount so enormously and so capriciously since the original estimate of 1898 that their accuracy is very doubtful. The first estimate must have been much too high; and what is to insure us that the present estimates are not equally incorrect?
> The comparisons of wages in different countries made by the commissioner are worthless, and the conclusions drawn from them are silly. No idea is given by these comparative tables regarding the varying conditions of employment, methods of payment, or efficiency of the workmen. We are gravely informed that day wages of workmen in shipbuilding are 50 to 100 per cent higher in America than in England, and from 40 to 60 per cent higher in England than in Germany. If these figures really proved what they are supposed to prove (i. e., higher labor cost in the United States), they would show the utter impossibility of England building ships. If there was any such enormous difference in real wages for laborers of like efficiency, to attempt the equalizing of the differences by a bounty would be absurd. The fact that steel and iron construction of other kinds is done in America more cheaply, as a rule, than in other countries shows that the efficiency of the American workman in the steel industry more than makes up the difference in his wages. The higher cost of ship construction in this country is not due to the higher cost of labor per unit of product, except in those cases where employment is unsteady and the labor force must be maintained on less than full-time work.
> It is thought by many that these higher costs do not really exist. Our shipbuilders have constructed several war vessels at prices below the bids made by the strongest English firms, and it is generally recognized that in the building of first-class yachts and torpedo boats American builders lead the world. This, however, does not prove our ability to construct merchant steamers as cheaply as the English.
> The commissioner of navigation in 1900 estimated the difference in favor of the English builder at 28 per cent. The estimates vary a good deal, but it is admitted, except by the most partisan antisubsidy agitators, that the English do build ships for the ocean transport more cheaply than we can. It would be strange if this were not the case. The American capitalist requires a higher rate of interest on his capital than that prevailing in England. This is, of course, due to the fact that capital is more productive in America. But in shipbuilding, conditions of the productivity of capital are reversed. Where an American shipyard turns out one steel vessel an English yard turns out a dozen, many of them on the same model. The English builder is able to use many identical parts, while the American builder is fortunate if he can use duplicate parts. It costs no more to superintend the building of a dozen ships than to superintend the building of one. Expensive machinery and highly paid skilled labor are constantly employed in English yards, while until recently the American yards experienced long periods of idleness, during which interest on capital, depreciation of plant, and wages of the necessary labor force consumed profits. The economies in the cost of building and of superintendence, due to organization of the industry on a large scale, give England its great advantage over the United States and all other rivals. In the building of single war vessels these economies vanish, for few duplicate parts can be used, the materials are of a special character, and the superintendence more costly. Some American yards have made a specialty of constructing the finest yachts, and therefore lead the world.

I do not believe that by the popular mandate this body has acquired, collectively, superior wisdom than its individual Members would have outside this Chamber. Why, then, should we, by spending other people's money, say to the capitalist shipbuilding is a good thing, and we'll guarantee you against losses? If shipbuilding on a large scale were a paying proposition, as I think it would be if we had no steel trust; if our coal and iron were not in the hands of our so-called "common carriers;" if the railroads had not parceled out the country and made impossible domestic free trade, which Chief Justice Marshall dreamed of for this American Empire, then this would become a reality. But domestic and foreign capital, which built our railroads and their betterments, will not invest in shipbuilding under the chaotic conditions of commercial lawlessness brought about by your tariff system of protection. It refuses to have anything to do with shipbuilding on a large scale. Capital will not invest in the attempt to grow citrus fruits, oranges, and lemons in Minnesota, New York, or Vermont, and for the same reason it will not recklessly embark in shipbuilding, which would at first, at least, not give it an adequate return.

At this point our collective wisdom is invoked to take from the necessities of the people, from the breakfast table, from their clothing, from the package of tobacco, and bread and butter of the people, and guarantee against loss a group of gentlemen who shall build ships. Would not every argument against ship subsidies apply to every other scheme of graft, to every scheme of dubious commercial stability? Does not the same argument apply in favor of every oil well, gold and silver mine, and every industrial and fraternal insurance without a proper reserve that finds it hard to compete with solvent concerns—solvent because by good management, careful selection, they have acquired wealth for their policy holders. [Applause.]

So much for the general views. If the majority insists on disguising its diversion of public moneys by the specious pretext that we should build our own ships, let us at least understand what that means. In other words, you are willing to spend public moneys in private shipyards, not to get ships, but to get work done. If you wish to spend public money on public work, it were a thousand times more beneficial to the entire country to build good roads, and begin right here, within the sight of the Dome of this Capitol, and all through the backward sections of this country. That this is not done is because our farmers have no lobbies, do not stand together, and can not deliver the vote of their workmen.

If the object were to own American ships, if it were really the intention of the advocates of this bounty business to carry our commerce in American-owned ships, you would not have this insistent, recurrent, and organized demand of a well-regulated and all-pervasive lobby. But the claim of using the ships, of showing our flag in the harbors of the world, is but a pretext. If we want to own ships under our own flag, let us permit those American citizens who have purchased foreign ships to register them here, under such regulations as to ownership as Congress may enact. This is what is done in other commercial business interests. But that the shipbuilders don't want. They want us to build ships, not to use them. A ship must, by its very nature, bring return freights, and in this the comparison between an American-built house and an American-built ship falls to the ground. An edifice becomes part of our national domain, fixed and permanent, built by Americans and for Americans, whereas a ship must depend for its livelihood and earning power on its return freights. A ship, in other words, by its nature and being, is of an international use. Unless, therefore, you are protection mad you can see that the argument for a foreign-built ship is a totally different thing from a foreign-built house, engine, or dynamo, which savor of the realty.

The interests of the shipowner are to purchase ships as cheaply as possible. The advocates of this bill know this quite as well as we do, and this bill does nothing to further that end. The interests of the shipbuilder are diametrically opposed to the shipowner, and normally these conflicting interests would be antagonizing one another were it not that the chance of getting enough graft from the Public Treasury by this proposed bill had unified conflicting interests. The labor unions and the farmers' organizations, through the American Federation of Labor and the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, have spoken against this proposition.

If you are so truly anxious to put the flag on American ships, why don't you permit the shipping owned by American capital to come under our registry? The freight that these ships now under foreign registry earn comes into our pockets anyhow, and to a certain extent this disposes of the artificial horror and counterfeited frenzy which every well-educated advocate of shipping bounties utters when on the subject of our paying millions a year to foreigners for carrying our freight. The answer to this argument is terse, and, if unparliamentary, must be pardoned because of its point, "The boy lied."

Quoting again from Doctor Meeker, who says:

Why should we remove capital and labor from other pursuits and take over the carrying trade? In order to keep this alleged one hundred and ten or three hundred million dollars at home? But why should we work to keep this particular sum at home rather than the amount we pay for English worsteds or French laces? To name the enormous amounts we might save by doing our own transportation does not prove our economic degredation. It must be shown how many millions we must pay out in order to save these $300,000,000 per annum before we can estimate the wisdom of engaging in the international freighting business.

Let us suppose that we pay foreign shipowners $150,000,000 per annum for carrying our freights. If we decide to dispense with the services of foreign ships and do our own freighting with American-built ships, owned by American capital and manned by American citizens as it is proposed, it means that we must divert capital from other lines of industry to the amount of at least a billion and a half of dollars and invest it in shipping. If this capital invested in other enterprises would earn $180,000,000 per annum, plainly the change to the shipping industry would result in a direct and immediate annual loss of $30,000,000 in the total social product, owing to the decreased productivity of capital and labor. This direct loss does not by any means measure the whole economic loss of such a change in industry. Capital and labor will not engage in the carrying trade unless they receive remuneration equal to what they receive in other industries in our country. They must offer services at least as cheaply as foreign rivals. Under the assumed conditions, the only possible way to save the amount paid to foreigners in freights is by means of a bounty of $30,000,000 per annum. The loss would be augmented by the cost of collecting the tax and administering the bounty, besides the losses due to the disturbance of other industries by the tax and the rapid and wasteful change to another industry. Of course the change could not take place immediately; but if the relative productivity of capital and labor in the United States and in foreign countries remained unchanged during the transition the reasoning would still hold good.

It may be objected that the conditions imposed are contrary to fact. It is true that the figures are not "statistical," but I have rather underrated than overrated the difference in producitivity of capital and labor engaged in international shipping compared with their productivity in American industries, up to very recent times at least.

* * * * * * *

In any case there is no sense whatever in the hysterical demand that we must own the ships that carry our commerce in order to keep the amount we pay in freights within our own national boundaries. The mystery and romance of the sea seem to have a most confusing effect upon the rational faculties of some statesmen. They associate the money earned by a steamship with the fabulous wealth of the Spanish Main. There is nothing extraordinarily attractive or remunerative about the sea freighting business. It would be very uneconomical to lure or drive capital and labor into this business if they are earning as much or more in other lines. If Mr. Blaine had been advised to cut down his household expenses by discharging his janitor and employing his own energies in the lucrative industries of carrying coal, cleaning the furnace, sweeping the cellar, etc., thus saving the relatively large sum of $400 in gold every year, and at the same time building up a flourishing home industry, he would have been amazed—perhaps displeased. Yet such a suggestion is scarcely more ridiculous than the eloquent appeal for a merchant marine made by Mr. Blaine in 1881.

* * * * * * *

It has been stated above that the extension of our commerce by means of a bounty is possible only in case the bounty acts so as to reduce freight rates. The advocates of ship subsidies do not usually mention the possibility of a diminution of freight rates. They rely upon the flag to extend commerce. "Trade follows the flag" is at once watchword and argument with them. Statistical support for this assertion is furnished in copious abundance, but, like all the statistics thus far examined, the figures are meaningless. It is shown, for instance, that the commerce of Germany with the Far East has increased since the North German Lloyd contract with the Government was made. It is complacently assumed that the increase is due to the subvention and that the proposed subsidies will act in the same way. The fact that German commerce increased just as rapidly before as after the granting of the subvention is not mentioned.

The subsidy agitators see in every foreign shipowner or master a deadly enemy, who is seeking to promote the commerce of his own native land at the expense of every other land. Now, it is a fact of no small economic importance that a foreign shipowner is always willing to carry American goods for a consideration, no matter how heartily he may hate Americans. Sea transportation is a business and not a religious or sentimental activity. Obviously this whole argument for national ships becomes a reductio ad absurdum; for how shall maritime nations promote their commerce without at the same time promoting the commerce of those countries with which they trade? It may be asserted that the nation without a merchant marine is excluded from intercourse with undeveloped and colonial countries.

But the undertakers of all nations are watching keenly for every opportunity to do profitable business. Our commerce with the Levant has increased so greatly in recent years that the Hamburg-American Line has found it advantageous to found a regular freight line between New York City and the ports of the eastern Mediterranean. Our commerce with the English colonies in South Africa has increased more rapidly than that of either England or Germany, though the two latter countries have their regular postal lines to South African ports. American agricultural implements have practically displaced German farm machinery in the Transvaal, because they are better, lighter, and cheaper. No case has yet come on record of a German shipmaster refusing to carry American goods on the grounds that it might injure German trade.

The complaints that American shippers can not find transportation for their goods are heard in the halls of Congress, but not in the boards of trade. Our commerce with China is carried on mostly by American ships, but Japanese, English, and German ships compete with our own for a share in this carrying trade, as also in the trade with Australia, India, and other parts of the world. On the margin of indifference it is probable that patriotism would decide the direction of commerce. For example, if a German sailing master had collected cargo in Chinese waters which he could take to Hamburg or New York with equal chances of making profits, he would probably go to Hamburg. But such cases are not numerous enough to make it worth while to pay nine or ten million dollars yearly in bounties to regular American postal lines on the chance of catching this trade.

It may be said that the captain of a regular liner has no choice but to take his cargo home, so that national trade is bound to be increased. It must be remembered, however, that subventioned steamers carry an insignificant part of the world's commerce. About 2 per cent of the British merchant marine receives subvention from the Government and are bound by contract to sail over prescribed routes within certain time limits. A somewhat larger portion of the German marine is so situated—6 per cent would be a most liberal estimate. French sailors and steamers receiving the general subsidy are under no compulsion to increase French trade, and, as a matter of fact, choose the longest routes between foreign countries for their activities, so as to earn the largest possible bounties. National commerce is a very secondary matter with them. In fact, the disadvantage of being compelled to sail regularly over the same definite course is urged as one of the chief reasons for the payment of subsidy to the postal lines. At the same time it is urged that regular communications are very much superior to an arrangement of voyages according to the needs of commerce. France has taken infinite pains to establish regular mail lines and to encourage French shipping so as to promote her commerce, but her exports and imports have remained practically stationary. The United States has done almost nothing in these directions, and her commerce has increased enormously. The history of the world's commerce seems to show conclusively that the nationality of shipowners is quite a secondary matter in the development of trade.

But a long course of wasting public moneys on private enterprises has hardened us. To take the money paid by all the people for the benefit of a favored few is unfortunately no longer astounding, but none the less unrighteous. In consequence of this we ship steel plates to Antwerp and thence to Belfast, and help the Irish compete with the English shipbuilders. Instead of cutting down the steel schedule and trying the experiment whether American labor, in a free market, can not by reason of its great efficiency defeat the poorly paid mechanic of Belfast and Birkenhead, we cap the absurdity by taxing the American laborer, in all fields of endeavor, to permit his master to build ships here, while steel plates are being dumped at the doors of the Belfast plants by the steel trust as low or lower than in our own shipyards.

So much for the shipbuilding argument. If we are to build ships, paradoxical as it may seem, we can not have ships, and if it is not to help the American shipyards, why not let American capital bring what it has purchased, wherever they can be bought cheapest, and register them under our flag? The two greatest maritime nations, England and Germany, practice this policy successfully.

WHY OUR MERCHANT MARINE HAS DECLINED.

The statement has been made that it costs from 20 to 40 per cent more to build an American ship than a foreign ship of that class and it costs from 20 to 40 per cent more to operate an American ship than a foreign ship.

This seems to me about as good a reason as could be advanced why the Government should not allure capitalists to invest in an industry that it seems can not be made to pay. These are not temporary disadvantages we are now suffering from, but are bound to increase year by year as the standard of living and the high wages obtained in the paying extractive industries affect the wages of mechanics and gradually raise the standard of living of the workmen in the protected industries. The entering wedge of this bounty system will soon make of this intrenched wrong a vested right, which will claim with some degree of plausibility a right to continuance at your hands after having been called into being by you. It can not be limited as to time. Like the infant industries of forty years ago, they have become our masters.

Doctor Meeker, on this subject, says:

We have had at least one notorious instance in our history of actual bribery by a steamship company to secure a larger bonus from the Government. Our experience with subsidized railroads and industries protected by the tariffs should have taught us to distrust the whole principle of protection. Every aid given to private enterprises makes them the greater beggars, while it increases their ability first to ask, then to bribe, and finally to demand alms from the people.

If a subsidy policy is once begun, it may not be so easy to stop. Even though it could be shown that a proper subsidy, judiciously administered, would be economically beneficial, the impossibility of freeing the legislature from the corrupting influence of interested lobbyists would condemn the theory in practice.

I have endeavored to show that without the handicap of a trust-breeding tariff we could build ships as cheaply as foreigners, but our seamen are right in demanding legislation against the extortionate rapacity of the owners, and therefore demand a higher standard of life and of good wages. Not only do I not blame them for this demand, but I am proud of it. The effect of universal and unrestricted free trade among 88,000,000 people have made that demand not only possible, but effective. And, consequently, you can not sail these ships in competition with the crews living under a lower standard than that demanded by Americans.

Think of it! Here you have daily before your eyes and peculiarly within your own knowledge the results of what absolute and unrestricted domestic free trade has done for 80,000,000 people—all alike patriotic and all alike desirous of making the most of life—and you have the effrontery to claim that the tariff and its abomination of protected parasites brought this about, and that the wages and standards of living of the wage-earners of this country are determined by such industries, which, according to your own showing, could not exist except through diversion of public revenues.

That is assuming the sincerity in your protestation on behalf of the wage-earner. As a matter of fact, you are not sincere in this. And seamen on bounty-fed ships, which could not exist but for the bounty, would soon be in the same position, as regards wages and conditions of life, as existed in the anthracite coal fields. United action on the part of laboring men in this country alone keeps up wages. Although we have by the bounty of the Almighty an unlimited supply of perfect coal, the conditions revealed by the Commission after the great strike showed that behind your tariff barrier, administered by men who blasphemously claimed the exercise of a God-given attribute, in an industry where, if ever, your claims of raising the standards of life should have shown itself in a living wage for the miners, your beneficiaries ground the faces of the poor and mocked the sufferings of the women and children. The protective tariff, where it does exclude foreign products in quantities, does not raise the wages—nay, it depresses them below those obtainable in open industries, which, after all, set the standard of wages. Iowa, Kansas, and California set this pace, and not Pennsylvania and Massachusetts. And so it is that I dread the artificial stimulation of this proposed new infant industry. [Applause.]

Quite recently we heard extracts from the writings of Henry Clay and Jackson as to their expectations of the tariff. Sixty years and more have passed, and, like Tories and Bourbons, you cling to the antiquated forms of exploiting the people. That you do not have a corn tax to supplement your other iniquitous extortions is due to the fact that the extractive industries, like corn, wheat, and cotton raising and lumber, set the standard of wages. Instead of addressing yourselves to stopping this waste you want to increase it by adding another protected hobo to the list of those who are to be fed and supported by the public; because, if an industry does not pay and can exist only by reason of public contributions, it is like any other eleemosynary system—of an educative value, but of no more economic use than an almshouse.

What sensible arguments have you brought forth that can seriously hold water? The statistics of the decline of our wooden tonnage is coincident with the increase of our greatest material growth, and it is just as fair to argue that the protective tariff caused a decline of shipping as that it built up our country. Americans earn more on shore than they could on the freighter on the ocean, and American capital is invested in foreign shipping because no false pretense was required to permit the owner to exploit the ships, the officers, the men, and their stokers. You first prevent the registry or purchase of foreign ships, and then complain that our flag is not shown in every port, while you force American capital to embark in foreign ships, because you are justly afraid of the labor vote, which would object to your practices differing so widely from your preachings. And this brings me to the next pet argument of the bounty grabbers—

THAT THE FOREIGNERS CONTROL OUR COMMERCE.

The great laws of demand and supply govern the price of staples, whether at New York, Liverpool, Chicago, or Antwerp, Detroit, or Alexandria, and the seaway being open to all in the long run, this ocean carrying trade regulates itself to meet increased demand. Why, then, when foreign ships do our carrying for us, should we care who does the work so long as it is done cheaply and well? To hear those in the interests of the ship-bounty lobby one would think that the ocean trade was something supremely beautiful and romantic, and that ocean freighting had a peculiar glamour derived from the buccaneer days. You may not remember that Kidd was one of the first products of a bounty-fed shipping. England and the colony of New York both share in the responsibility of equipping and starting his bounty-fed commerce, and when it failed to pay (the laws of demand and supply being the same as it is now) Kidd ran amuck. That was because he could not join, consolidate, and Morganize, if you will permit me, the carrying trade and prey on it within the statute law.

Far be it from me to resort to the argument ad hominem or ad navem. My case does not require any such aid.

The trust or combination of all shipowners against American trade is a pet scare to lure other people's money into the maw of the shipping trust, and yet the shipping trust would undoubtedly be the chief beneficiary of any such diversion of public money as this bill contemplates. Do we really believe that ships are changed in their character as traders because one flag or another flies at the main truck? Don't you know that ships, whether they are Norwegian, Japanese, English, or German, must get a return cargo or go out of business? How, then, is it possible to expect grown men to believe that a combination of shipowners can monopolize the ocean carrying trade? Does not the mere statement carry its own refutation?

If such a combination were possible among the carriers on the North Atlantic, don't you know that the grain and the cotton would flow to Galveston, New Orleans, and Savannah, and that every ocean tramp would flock to these ports? If you really fear the combination of ocean carriers, why not try to regulate them by subjecting their freights to the rate-making power of the Government and give the Interstate Commerce Commission control over the ocean rates as well as over the land-borne commerce of the country? That ocean rates can be regulated by a Federal commission or by any agency you choose to create is not a question of power, but of expediency. I am greatly in favor of trying some plan of this character before we embark in expensive bounties wrung from the common people through the United States Treasury. We have to-day the greatest merchant marine in the world in our coastwise, lake, and river carrying trade. All of this great fleet must be built and repaired in American shipyards.

We are told, however, that a war between great European nations might cause our products to rot in our fields, and this in the same breath with the statement that every other nation is turning out bounty-fed ships.

Yet is it conceivable for us, who have lived forty or fifty years, to believe that a case can arise in which all maritime nations are engaged at once, in which no ships are available as carriers? Is it not a fact that the great waste entailed by modern war must ultimately be borne by all commercial nations? Our staples will be carried, war or no war. People must be fed and clothed, and that carrying trade will go on. The falling off of dispensable commodities would not affect the value of our staples. If we had a bounty-fed shipping depending on a bounty for an existence the inevitable falling off of high-class freight would at once furnish an additional reason for a clamorous appeal and recourse to public funds.

It is eminently characteristic of the advocate of subsidies to state, in the same breath, that the free purchase of foreign-built ships would not solve the problem and then to state that millions of American money is invested in foreign ships. Plausible as their argument may be, in its last analysis it is simply an attempt to get a sum sufficient to perform double work to guarantee the shipbuilder and then the shipowner. I have shown above how irreconcilable this conflict of interests is bound to be. It has been claimed by trained observers that we are a nation of boys, whose general characteristic is a dislike of expert opinion. A nation that will not learn from the experience of others, that must burn its fingers in each generation, must inevitably fall into every financial, economic, and industrial quagmire in order to learn its lesson. Not so many years ago a Member of Congress exclaimed, "What can Europe teach us?" Our position as a world power should have taught us that efficiency by a legislature can only be done when we husband our energies to accomplish feasible things. What is feasible may be learned by the hard-bought experience of foreigners much more easily than by again and again trying the feat of raising ourselves by our boot straps.

What has been Europe's experience with ship subsidies? A candid answer would compel every student of the subject to admit that subsidies have been a great failure, a vast and wanton waste of public funds. [Applause.]

France and Austria by bounties may have built up shipping, but that was accomplished by sapping the vitality and soul of domestic industries and leaving a giant infant industry whose weakness increases with its growth and age. Furthermore, the amount of governmental supervision and paternal coddling, the huge army of officials, fattening on this as on every enterprise in Austria and France which have the faintest connection with the Government, should certainly deter us from following their footsteps.

The history of German ship subsidies is well stated by Doctor Meeker, but I can insert only his conclusion:

A certain class of people in England, and especially in the United States, read the evidences of Germany's progress in shipping, and, by means of a process which it would be flattery to call reasoning, they conclude that this progress is due to enormous subsidies paid by Germany. There is only one sufficient answer to this assertion. It is absolutely false. First, as we have seen, Germany does not pay large subsidies. Though the contracts are not let at public auction, the Government takes good care of its end of the bargain, and requires good service for moderate pay. In relation to miles traveled the German service is cheaper than the English, though in relation to the quantity of mails it is considerably dearer. Secondly, no possible connection between the postal subventions and the growth of the marine can be established. The North German Lloyd and the Hamburg-Amerika Line owe their great success to the emigrant movement to the United States. It is scarcely necessary to mention the great industrial revolution in Germany since 1880 to prove that the growth of German shipping is entirely independent of official tinkering. As to the indirect bounties, their influence can hardly account for any considerable part of the rapid development of German shipping and commerce. As was shown above, the intent of the Government was undoubtedly to aid shipping and encourage trade. If this motherly hovering has produced good results, it has been because of its inadequacy.

Doctor Meeker shows that Great Britain has never granted general navigation bounties, and, with the exception of the bounty of 5 shillings per ton for vessels above a certain tonnage, granted in the reign of Elizabeth, no general construction bounties have ever been granted by the British Government. When mention is made of British shipping subsidies, the postal subventions are invariably meant. And from Great Britain let us shift our view to Japan. Here is what happened, as described by the same writer:

Shipping grew as rapidly before the law of 1896 as after, in spite of the monopolistic power of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha. Since 1868 Japan has experienced an economic revolution even more astounding than its political revolution. The methods and machinery of production were changed with incredible rapidity. In a few years the nation rushed from barbarism into civilization through the power of its imitative genius. But the progress was not swift enough to satisfy the leaders and they imitated the protective methods used in western lands to stimulate progress. The first experiment with state-aided steamship navigation created a monopoly that exploited both Government and people. The attempt to fight the devil with fire by creating another state-supported steamship company to compete with the first led to a "community of interests" arrangement that must excite the admiration of the king of Wall street promoters. But the ambitious Japanese leaders were determined to have immediately all the institutions possessed by European nations, and accordingly long-distance postal lines were established by the law of 1896. There is no doubt that the lines established by this law are now running profitably. It is equally certain that the law was in part responsible for the subsequent stagnation in trade and industry which led the Government to modify this extravagant measure. The laws of 1899 and 1900 provide for very large expenditures in proportion to the resources of the country and the value of money in relation to commodities and services, but the expenditures are held within limits so there can not be a repetition of the too rapid multiplication of ships. Whether these payments are purely subventions for postal service or partly subsidies, they have attracted capital into shipping, and the economic development of Japan, her geographical situation, resources, and the character of her population made the development permanent. Shipping would have developed anyhow—in fact, was developing with great rapidity. The Government merely gave form to the maritime undertakings of the capitalists. It will always be a question if the Government gave the best direction, whether the development would not have been sounder, though less rapid, had the capitalists been left to decide for themselves what lines to establish.

The German steamship companies have made a profitable business of the emigrant trade, and the Government never diverted capital into new channels; the traders preceded the shipping. When we have a sufficiently large export trade, Americans will build ships, bounty or no bounty; but let us not forget that the Germans wanted ships, not bounties, for work done, and that shipbuilding material was imported free of duty. The testimony of the general manager of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Company, the first week in April, before the Committee on Merchant Marine, was that his company were building six new steamers for the Pacific Ocean and the Caribbean Sea trade. The customs tariff of Germany exempted from duty all materials of construction and equipment of seagoing vessels, and after the Government controlled the railways they granted to the German industries exceptionally low rates on shipbuilding material and on coal and on steel. They admitted the unfairness of the protective-tariff principle by virtually making all the interests affected sharers in this diversion of public funds. The rates granted by the state railways and by the bounty-fed shipping help exports and are not fettered by illogical and self-contradictory systems of railroad rates violating the principle of protection to domestic industries. The Germans know full well that you can not export unless you import, and in spite of the illogical conditions have made a partial success of bounty-fed shipping under strict state control. But we should not forget that the Germans have a tiny ocean front and an immense surplus population, and that their neighbors have all tried in vain to increase the national well-being by mutual taxation.

In order to make the German example a valid application here similar conditions must prevail, and until then Germany's example is misleading.

The example of England shows that ship subsidies are of no earthly use to progressive and paying concerns, that they only insure dividends and retard development, and that the free ships force the pace of the subsidy beggars. Examples of this are not wanting. Listen to the following from Doctor Meeker's work:

The statistics of the commerce and shipping of France, Italy, and Austria, quoted by the opposition to show the harmfulness of bounties, are by no means so worthless, for they show that, at least in some cases, bounties do not lead to an expansion in commerce and shipping. But to conclude that a bounty to shipping in the United States would act like a bounty to shipping in France is the reverse of reasonable. It is quite probable that this country would increase its shipping by means of bounties; but, as has been repeatedly pointed out, the enlarging of an industry by government aid does not mean an economic gain, much less an ethical gain.

Although the popular arguments for bounties are based on meaningless statistics, and are rather oratorical than logical, it seems necessary to consider some of the assertions most frequently made and most likely to mislead.

Saving of freight charges.—The subsidy advocates assert that the vast sums paid to foreign shipowners as freight charges will be saved to the country as a result of the bounties. This they regard as their most telling "economic" argument for the subsidies. Mr. Charles H. Cramp, of the Cramp shipbuilding firm, has used this argument with peculiar enthusiasm and energy. He informs us that we must pay the freights both ways, if we employ foreign shipowners to carry our exports and imports. Continuing, he says: "No fine-spun theory of cloistered or collegiate doctrinaire can wipe out these facts." We can not but feel a passing qualm of pity for the miserable doctrinaire, culpable though he may be. It seems needlessly harsh to crush him so remorselessly with such very wonderful facts. The only possible criticism of these facts is that they are not true.

What are the grounds for asserting that we must pay the freights both ways as a penalty for our inability to run ships under the American flag? The comprehension of this subtle theory is strictly limited to those men in the shipping industry and some few "practical statesmen." There is not even the most superficial excuse for such a statement. If our merchants were the only merchants in the world, then it might be said that they must, in the first instance, pay all freights. The absurdity of assuming that we must deduct freights from the value of our exports and add freights to the cost of our imports is too evident to need discussion. Professor Cairnes shows that of two countries carrying on exchanges, the one that has the greater natural resources exchanges at an advantage because of the greater productivity of its labor and capital. The cost (meaning the subjective cost) of 1,000 units of value is less in the United States than the cost of a like number of units of value in England.

He argues, therefore, that the United States derives the greater benefit from exchanging. Taking this view, we may reasonably say that England in reality pays the freights both ways, or at least the greater part of them. Whoever pays the freights, the mere fact that commerce between the United States and Great Britain is carried on and is steadily increasing shows, beyond the possibility of contradiction, that the commerce is profitable to both countries. If the statements of Mr. Cramp and Mr. Blaine really required refutation the statistics of commerce would furnish a sufficient rejoinder.

It must be evident to anyone who understands the first elementary principles of international trade that we pay no more than our proper share of freight charges. But Mr. Blaine and his followers tell us the amount we do pay goes into the hands of foreigners and is "diverted from our commerce." It is forever lost to us unless we borrow it back on bonds.

Here, again, the vacuity of the argument baffles the economist. Furthermore, it is not and never has been true that the entire amount paid to foreign steamship lines in freights goes out of the country. A large percentage of the tonnage carrying our foreign commerce is owned by American capital, though sailing under foreign flags. The profits and dividends on capital remain in this country, which fact should soothe the sorrow of those who mourn for the gold that flows out of our coffers.

The argument of the ship-subsidy people that by spending public money on ships we will keep at home the freight now paid to the ocean carriers has been refuted, first, by their own showing that American capital is invested in foreign ships because it pays better, and, second, because it is based on the fallacy that a ship need not earn return freight.

In the course of my speech I have referred to the attitude of the American Federation of Labor, a splendid organization with a membership of nearly 2,000,000 workingmen of America. The following from its president, Mr. Samuel Gompers, explains the position of that body:

OFFICE OF THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
423 G Street, Washington, D. C., February 13, 1906.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: The Senate of the United States has before it and under consideration S. 529, commonly known as the "subsidy bill." Bills of a similar character before previous Congresses have been given considerable attention by the working people of our country, and their views expressed thereon, and particularly is this so in reference to the principle involved as well as certain features of the bill in the third session of the last Congress, being H. R. 17098. Comparison and perusal of this bill with S. 529 shows a marked similarity in purpose, method, and principle, and it is both the presentation to you and through you to the Senate of the United States that I am compelled to address this letter to you.

October, 1905, Mr. Daniel J. Keefe, president of the International Longshoremen's Association and vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, requested an opinion from me upon the subsidy bill H. R. 17098, and because a perusal of my reply to him and because I am convinced that in effect the reply applies equally to the present subsidy bill, S. 529, I quote that letter herein. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 17, 1905.

Mr. DANIEL J. KEEFE,
President International Longshoremen's Association,
Elks' Temple Building, Detroit, Mich.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Thus far I have been unable to write one word of my reports, the other work requiring so much of my attention. In spite of being overwhelmingly busy I have tried to comply with the request contained in your favor of October 12 in regard to the Grosvenor bill—H. R. 17098, of the Fifty-eighth Congress, third session—being a bill on the merchant marine and fisheries, commonly known as the "subsidy bill."

I have also read the report of the committee—Report No. 4136, Fifty-eighth Congress, third session, House of Representatives, and which accompanied H. R. 17098. Of course, I do not pretend to say that I have thoroughly digested the provisions of the bill and report. To make any such claim would be futile, because it would require thorough study to entitle one to reach conclusions upon which one can so definitely assert.

However, from a casual reading and a fair conception of their purport, as well as some experience with measures of this character, I submit to you the following tentative conclusions which were forced upon my mind; or, rather, I submit the following for your consideration in connection with this subject:

In connection therewith I need not, however, mention the fact that the American Federation of Labor has repeatedly and almost unanimously declared against the ship subsidy bills that have been introduced in the various Federal Congresses. I only need briefly call your attention to the few points to which I shall refer.

You will observe on page 5 of the bill, from line 13 to 16, inclusive, there is a provision that if one-sixth of the crew are American citizens of the United States, or men who have declared their intention to become citizens, that the vessel shall be entitled to subvention. In other words, five-sixths of the crew may not only be aliens, but could be Asiatics, and in view of the fact that the tendency of the ship companies, like other employers, is toward a desire to get the cheapest possible labor, it is not difficult to understand that the shipping companies receiving this subsidy would hire as many of the aliens as possible—that is, five-sixths of the crew—at a low wage, and through this means endeavor to force down the wages of the one-sixth of the crew necessary to be employed to entitle it to the subsidy.

On page 6 of the bill you will find a provision that a vessel shall not be entitled to the subsidy, unless the members of the crew shall be enrolled as naval volunteers, and on page 2 of the bill it provides that they shall be "enrolled for a period of three years, during which they shall be subject to render service on call of the President in time of war."

One can readily see that the shipping masters will make the enrollment into the naval volunteer service a condition precedent to employment, and that the failure or refusal of a seaman to enroll as a volunteer in the Navy, and subject to a call in time of war, will be sufficient cause for shipping masters to refuse to give these men employment at all.

Of course every American must feel and should feel that in time of need Americans should readily respond to the call for troops on land or sea, to defend the interests and honor of our country, but I believe you will agree with me that when a man's employment in times of peace depends upon his enlistment in either the Army or the Navy, that such a provision is tantamount to compulsory enlistment, and practically constitutes conscription.

Then, again, on pages 11 and 12 you will find that a tax or duty is imposed upon foreign vessels carrying products to the United States, or from 8 to 16 cents tonnage per year. It is not difficult to discern that every cent of such taxation will be placed upon the products which the people of the United States will have to pay on every article they consume, at any rate during the period from the enactment of the bill until every article brought from a foreign country is brought in ships flying our flag. And surely between such period and the entire carrying of foreign trade by American vessels a considerable time will elapse.

In the entire bill there is not one provision that makes one solitary gain for the men who make their living by going down to the sea in ships.

In the report of the committee a pious wish is expressed that other committees of Congress should take this matter into consideration, but these perfunctory declarations mean little or nothing. If the committee had any idea for the improvement of the condition of the seamen, they certainly could have drafted it in the bill they had under consideration.

I regret that I have not any more time to devote to the consideration of this matter, but the above is submitted to your careful consideration as the conclusions reached at the first flush after reading and noting the contents of the bill and the report of the committee. You will, of course, understand that I am not an expert in maritime affairs. I speak from the standpoint of the layman who has had some little experience in dealing with matters of this character, and in that spirit and understanding I ask you to accept it for what it is worth.

Omit from this quoted letter the word "Volunteer" and substitute the words of the present bill, "Naval Reserve," and the applicability will thus be obvious.

It may not be amiss to call attention to the fact that on page 4, lines 6 to 9, in accordance with the provisions therein stated, the seamen coming under the operation of the bill, if it were enacted into law, would, while employed by private concerns, still be subject to such orders and regulations as the Government, through its Secretary of the Navy, may prescribe. Again, making conscription practically absolute as a condition for the employment of a seaman on a private vessel.

On page 5, lines 3 to 11, the following language occurs:

"Such retainer shall be paid at the end of each year of service on certificate, by an officer to be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, that the member of the naval reserve has satisfactorily complied with the regulations, and on certificates by the Commissioner of Navigation that such member has served satisfactorily for at least six months of the preceding twelve months on vessels of the United States in the merchant marine or in the deep-sea fisheries."

In other words, this provision of the bill makes the seaman who has entered in the naval reserve dependent upon the whim and fancy, favoritism and displeasure of his private employer before even the seaman may receive the Government's largess.

Without discussing further the general principles of the bill, it appeals to me with irresistible force that the particular features of the bill, to which I have addressed myself, should commend themselves sufficiently strong to you so that they may act as a protest against their enactment into law.

The workmen of America love our country, and there are no more loyal in all the masses of the people than are those who are enrolled in the membership of the trade unions of our country. It is in their name that I address you, and suggest further that wisdom and foresight and patriotism, as well as economy, should suggest a definite method by which men, American by birth, citizenship, or sympathy, may be recruited from the merchant marine of America for the naval strength of our country in times of stress and war as well as in peace.

Very respectfully, yours,

SAML. GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

The Patrons of Husbandry, an organization of American farmers, 1,000,000 strong, speak in no uncertain language on the subject in the following letter:

NATIONAL GRANGE, PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY,
OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE,
April 6, 1906.

To the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives, Fifty-ninth Congress:

In behalf of the National Grange we desire to submit our objection to Senate bill 529, known as the "ship subsidy bill."

We understand the present bill differs from its predecessors in that its authors have tried to cover up the ugly word "subsidy" and "bounty" by the use of the term "subvention." Instead of providing for the payment of bounties to shipbuilders or owners of steam or sailing vessels the bill provides for the payment of "subventions" in amounts proportionate to the size of the vessels, the nature of the trade in which they are engaged, etc. A subsidy by any other name smells as rank, and the National Grange protests as earnestly against the use of public revenues for subvention to a few persons as against bounties or subsidies to the same class of citizens.

The language of the bill is obscure, perhaps intentionally so, but it is clear that under it there would be taken during the next ten years from the money raised by taxing the people of the whole country about $50,000,000, which would be given to a small number of persons building or owning steam of sailing vessels. In return for this immense amount of money what are the taxpayers of the country, and especially the farmers, to receive?

It is claimed that as the result of this system of bounties the number of vessels built or owned by our citizens engaged in the foreign trade will be largely increased; that this will cause a reduction in freight rates, and that this saving in freight, in so far as it affects the exportation of farm products, would go largely to the American farmer. There is absolutely no proof of this contention, but on the contrary all past experience has shown that it is the foreign purchaser who gets the benefit of lower freight rates. Lower ocean rates mean lower rates from Canada, the Argentine Republic, Russia, India, Australia, and other competing countries, and as it is the competition of the products of those countries that fixes prices in the foreign market a reduction in freight charges would simply mean lower prices to the foreign consumer.

In fact, it can be shown that the result of the subsidy policy would be to encourage foreign competition with our farm products in neutral markets. If the effect of this legislation would be, as its advocates claim, to increase the number of vessels owned by citizens of the United States engaged in the foreign trade, it is evident that such vessels would displace a certain number of foreign vessels which are now carrying our farm products to foreign ports. These displaced freight vessels would have to seek freight elsewhere, and their owners would naturally try to increase the export trade in farm products of competing nations by carrying such products as cheaply as possible. The result would be to stimulate competition with our surplus farm products in the neutral markets in which they are now sold. It would seem that there is no good reason why the American farmer should tax himself in order that foreigners can buy our farm products at a lower price.

When challenged to show how the "subvention" scheme will benefit the farmers, its advocates fall back on vague generalities as to trade following the flag and the increase in exports which they claim would result from having our goods shipped in vessels owned by our own citizens; but they have never been able to show that foreigners would buy more of our goods merely because they were shipped on American vessels instead of foreign vessels. Foreigners are very much like Americans in one respect—they want to buy things as cheaply as possible, and they will buy American goods when they are as good and as cheap as those of other countries. If our goods can be sold cheap enough, the foreigner will buy them. If our products can not compete in price in neutral markets with those of other countries, we can not expect the foreigner to be so foolish as to pay more for the goods he wants just because they may be sent to him on an American-owned vessel. The subsidy advocates complain that the foreign vessel carries freight so cheaply that American ships can not compete. This means that American producers get their goods carried to other countries on foreign vessels cheaper than they can be carried on American vessels, and there is no ground for believing that the foreign buyer will take any more of our goods shipped on an American vessel than on a foreign ship.

It is urged by the subsidy hunters that the cost of building vessels in this country is so much greater than in foreign countries that a Government bounty is necessary in order to equalize conditions. As a matter of fact, the chief item of additional cost of American vessels is the high price of the steel plates, frames, bolts, etc., that enter into the construction of a vessel. It is notorious that the United States Steel Company sells steel plates, etc., to foreign shipbuilders at prices far below those charged American shipbuilders, thus directly aiding to encourage foreign competition and discourage shipbuilding in this country. If the believers in bounties will aid in getting legislation under which the steel trust will have to sell its products in the United States as cheaply as it does to foreign countries, our shipbuilders will soon be able to compete successfully with their foreign rivals.

The first name to the foregoing letter is that of the national lecturer, ex-Governor Bachelder, of New Hampshire, well and favorably known throughout the country.

The Lake Seamen's Union, through Capt. Andrew Furuseth, of San Francisco, president of the Pacific Seamen's Union, presented the following resolution:

Lake Seamen's Union.

RESOLUTION.

Whereas the United States Senate is about to vote upon the subsidy bill: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Lake Seamen's Union in meeting assembled, That we respectfully but earnestly protest against the bill in its present form and appeal to the Senate to strike out subsections 3 and 6 of section 3, for the following reasons:

First. Subsection 3 appears to give some advantage to the seaman, but in reality lowers the standard of efficiency by authorizing the vessel to go to sea with but half of the crew able seamen. They have done so in the past, but in violation of the spirit, if not the letter, of the law.

Second. Subsection 6 provides that the owner must have a certain number of naval reserves to get the subsidy. This means that the seamen must be in the reserves in order to get employment. This is conscription pure and simple, and we protest against being selected for this while other men may under ordinary conditions choose whether they will enlist or not until the nation needs all its men.

Third. It would compel us to be in the military service from 21 to 47 or quit the sea.

Fourth. Under such conditions we would rather quit the sea, since it would be a notice to us that we must, as seamen, give up any hope of improvement in our life. We have asked for laws in accord with American ideas, and we are getting more servitude and more discriminations against us.

Fifth. The discrimination is coupled with a bonus, which places us in the position of receiving, while in health, money which we have not earned and which is, therefore, in the eyes of honest men, dishonorable.

Sixth. The striking out of these two sections leaves it to each seaman to choose for himself whether he will accept the bonus or not, and this we respectfully suggest is a privilege granted to all other servants. As workingmen we ask to be permitted to retain so much of the respect of our fellows and ourselves as our present status has made it possible for us to keep.

On behalf of the Lake Seamen's Union:

F. A. HANSON,
Chairman.
V. A. OLANDER,
Assistant Secretary.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 9, 1906.

Captain Furuseth, in his testimony before the committee last month, used the following language:

From my own practical experience, and from my knowledge, and from the investigations that I have been able to make, I propose to dispute those four fundamental facts, and to say that this bill, if enacted into law, will not increase the number of seamen under the American flag subject to draft into the Navy under certain conditions. It will, on the very contrary, cause a large number of men now under the American flag—and who, by the way, are citizens of the United States—to seek some other place to get a living except at sea. If they can not find it on shore in the United States, they will probably find it in some other part of the world, where the conscription runs from one to three years instead of here where, under this bill, it will run from the time a man is 18 until he is 45.

I shall add as a part of my speech an editorial from that sterling stand-pat Republican daily paper, the New York Press, of the date February 16, 1906, which speaks for itself:

THE SENATE SHIPPING PIRACY.

The ship-subsidy bill passed by the Senate ought not to receive even the courtesy of debate in the House. Divested of its sham virtues of naval reserves and fixed percentages of American seamen in the service, it is nothing but naked piracy against the United States Treasury to turn money into the hands of individuals already holding investments in shipping, but not satisfied with their financial returns.

The Senate piracy is not a bill to restore, enlarge, and maintain a flourishing shipping; it is a bill to fatten those already in the business without creating a new merchant marine.

The people of this country do want a merchant navy. They realize that it must be built. They would favor any plan which embraced the creation of more shipping. From the Senate they would get nothing of the sort. They would, for the most part, only pay money into the hands of those owning existing shipping. This Senate scheme is not one to restore the merchant marine; it is one to enrich a few individuals, with absolutely no benefits following to the nation.

There is one way to assure enormous merchant fleets plying across the seas as successful and complete as the fleets on the lakes and in the coastwise trade. There is no coastwise shipping anywhere else in the world to compare with ours. No subsidies have been called for by it. There is no whine for subventions; no lobbying for mail contracts. The powerful industry has grown and continues to grow because it exists under a policy which provides business for it.

If there were a policy that provided business for transoceanic ships, as for the coastwise vessels, capital would build and operate shipping for the oceans as for the lakes and the coastwise traffic, and it would never ask nor want for subsidies, and the fleets springing into being would make money—they would flourish and increase. The American bottoms would regain the supremacy which they held on the oceans for half a century, when the shipping policy of the nation provided business for American ships.

If the House is to make an effort to restore American shipping and to provide that it shall be maintained as a self-supporting institution, it will waste no time on the Senate measure. It will insist on something that will provide business for American bottoms. A tonnage tax discriminating against foreign vessels engaged in the traffic with this country will do this; a discriminating tariff duty in favor of the vessel which sails into our ports under the Stars and Stripes will do it. Subsidy without business never will.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], in concluding his remarks, suggests that a resolution be passed "saying in plain terms that the American Congress will subsidize everything else." It is this fact that we have gone too far with this matter of favoring the classes at the expense of the people that has caused a halt to be called.

The various subsidies, under the guise of a protective tariff, have at least this virtue, that they are necessary to enable the Government to pay the expenses of administration. They do not, as would be the case if this vicious legislation became law, dip their unhallowed hands into the Treasury of the United States to help support a special interest that is certainly old enough to stand alone.

If the shipbuilding lobby, a thoroughly organized body, that has for years laid siege to Congress for assistance, would turn its attention and energies in the right direction and go to work it would not be necessary to spend its money and time in trying to get something for nothing from the American people.

With the coastwise, river, and lake carrying trade belonging solely and exclusively to ships built (and repaired) in American shipyards, with a tonnage the largest in the world except Great Britain, there is no need of assistance to the shipbuilding industry.

Mr. Lewis Nixon, a famous naval architect and shipbuilder of New York, in his testimony before the Commission in May, 1904, on page 73, volume 1, said, among other things:

In regard to the first cost of ships, a comparison by a percentage statement as to the cost of ships here and in England is very liable to be misleading. To say that a ship costs 50 per cent more here than in England naturally must be misleading, from the fact that we are probably not taking into account any of the conditions at all in making that comparison. In England to-day, if we consider the cost of ships, you will find a very great distress in shipbuilding industry and ships are low.

The producer in this country—the farmer, the mechanic, and the laboring man—upon whom the burden of this proposed subsidy falls, is the one who opposes its enactment. These classes receive but little or no substantial benefit from the tariff, and are therefore opposed to its extension. The Republican party, while standing pat on the trust-building protection ideas, dare not further aggravate the masses. Hence the strong language of the gentleman from Ohio whose potent influence will not be felt in the next Congress.

An important Congressional election is approaching, and the astute leaders of that party see the handwriting on the wall. They see a vision of a Congress again controlled by the grand old Democratic party, the party that built up this great and prosperous nation in its most trying days. They see the people again in the full enjoyment of all the privileges inherent under our glorious free Government.

The order has gone forth—no extension of the system of bounties, the robbery of the many to enrich the few, and a promise to revise the iniquitous tariff schedules, if the people are good and continue to vote the Republican ticket.

The Democratic party, the party of the people, standing on that rock of equal rights for all, special privileges to none, look to the ides of next November for a glorious victory for the common people. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. I yield to my colleague [Mr. MAYNARD].

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to deal with the historical and romantic settlement at Jamestown, the heroic struggle of that band of hardy souls who in their three little ships came to anchor in Powhatan's river May 13, 1607, or the pregnant influences that had their beginning three hundred years ago at that spot, and developed us into the world power of to-day and influenced the history of the world. There is a phase of the subject, however, that I desire to bring to the attention of the House.

On March 3, 1905, there was passed and approved an act which authorized the holding of a Naval, Marine, and Military Exposition on and near the waters of Hampton Roads, in the State of Virginia, and directing the President to make proclamation of said celebration, and authorizing him to invite foreign nations to participate by sending naval vessels and representatives of their armies, and in furtherance of that object provided $125,000 for their entertainment. And to further commemorate the settlement of Jamestown Island made an appropriation of $50,000 for a monument to be erected on the site of the settlement; $15,000 for permanent moorings for use of vessels participating in said celebration, and $10,000 for exhibiting on the scene of the engagement between the Monitor and the Merrimac one or more of the old monitors of that period, in order to illustrate the progress of naval construction; $50,000 to be spent by the Commission created by this act, not therein specifically provided for, in preparing for and conducting said celebration, including expenses of said Commission; $250,000 to celebrate the birthday of the nation at the place of its birth.

The President in due time made proclamation to the world as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States has passed an act approved March 3, 1905, and entitled "An act to provide for celebrating the birth of the American nation, the first permanent settlement of English-speaking people on the Western Hemisphere, by the holding of an international naval, marine, and military celebration in the vicinity of Jamestown, on the waters of Hampton Roads, in the State of Virginia; to provide for a suitable and permanent commemoration of said event, and to authorize an appropriation in aid thereof, and for other purposes;"

And whereas section 3 of the said act reads as follows:

"SEC. 3. The President of the United States is hereby authorized to make proclamation of said celebration, setting forth the event to be commemorated, inviting foreign nations to participate by the sending of their naval vessels and such representation of their military organizations as may be practicable;" * * *

Now, therefore, I Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the said act, do hereby declare and proclaim that there shall be inaugurated, in the year 1907, on and near the waters of Hampton Roads, in the State of Virginia, an international naval, marine, and military celebration, beginning May 13, and ending not later than November 1, 1907, for the purpose of commemorating, in a fitting and appropriate manner, the birth of the American nation, the first permanent settlement of English-speaking people on the American Continent, made at Jamestown, Va., on the 13th day of May, 1607, and in order that the great events of American history which have resulted therefrom may be accentuated to the present and future generations of American citizens. And in the name of the Government and of the people of the United States, I do hereby invite all the nations of the earth to take part in the commemoration of an event which has had a far-reaching effect upon the course of human history, by sending their naval vessels to the said celebration and by making such representations of their military organizations as may be practicable.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 29th day of March, 1905, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-ninth.

[SEAL.] THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

By the President:

ALVEY A. ADEE,
Acting Secretary of State.

And the Department of State forwarded to the foreign countries the invitation of the United States in the following language:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 7, 1905.

To the diplomatic officers of the United States.

GENTLEMEN: I transmit herewith copies of the proclamation issued by the President on the 29th of March last, inviting, in the name of the Government and people of the United States, the Government to which you are accredited to take part in an international naval, marine, and military celebration in 1907, at and near the waters of Hampton Roads, in the State of Virginia, in commemoration of the birth of the American nation, the first permanent settlement of English-speaking people on the American Continent, made at Jamestown, Va., on the 13th day of May, 1607.

I also inclose copies of the act of Congress in pursuance of which the proclamation was issued, by which you will see that the sum of $125,000 is appropriated for the entertainment of foreign naval and military representatives.

While the event to be celebrated was one with which the people of England alone were connected, the President, the Congress, and the people of the United States are not unmindful of the recognition due to the courageous and hardy navigators and colonists of other nations who laid the foundations of permanent settlements in America; and it is most fitting that the act of Congress and the proclamation of the President should include all the nations of the earth who have yielded so many of their sons to make prosperity the destiny of the United States.

In communicating the invitation you will make known the great pleasure with which the President will learn of the intention of the Government to which you are accredited to participate in the celebration by the sending of its naval vessels and such representation of its military organizations as it may deem proper.

Cotemporaneously with this celebration authorized by the Government of the United States, there will be held an international exposition on the shores of the great harbor under the auspices of the Jamestown Exposition Company, the interests of which I shall be pleased to have you promote by lending your assistance in all proper ways to its duly accredited representatives who may present themselves to you.

I inclose some literature which the company has supplied for your information.

I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant,

ELIHU ROOT.

The nations of the earth, recognizing the importance of the settlement at Jamestown and its influence on the destiny of the world, and wishing to show the development of their arms and commerce and to do honor to the invitation of this Government, have accepted beyond our expectations. The following governments have notified the State Department of their intention to participate: Great Britain, France, Russia, Mexico, Belgium, Cuba, Argentine Republic, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, and Chile. Others have signified that the invitation would be accepted later, when necessary forms had been complied with. In fact, only one country on the globe has declined the invitation—that of Siam, stating it was not in position to take part in the celebration.

The act that was passed March 3, 1905, was not what the friends of the bill thought was necessary, wise, or befitting the dignity of the occasion, the importance of the event, or creditable to the hospitality of the nation. This was an unwilling compromise forced on the exposition company by the powers that controlled recognition and permission to call up the bill. But, Mr. Chairman, the event once authorized, the ball once put in motion, the wide acceptance of our invitation by foreign nations, the necessity of meeting the question of the proper entertainment of our guests, the interest manifested by the people of the United States, the intention of so large a number of States to participate—their legislatures having made appropriaions to that end, the States' appropriations being something like one million and a half, about the same amount we are asking the Government to appropriate—has brought the necessity for further legislation providing for Government participation in carrying out the law of March 3, 1905, and to that end I have introduced H. R. 12610, which was referred to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, which committee, after having numerous hearings and taking the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury, of War, of the Navy, and other competent witnesses, reported it back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which substitute is now on the Calendar.

As the Secretary of State said in his invitation to foreign powers, contemporaneously with this celebration authorized by the Government of the United States, there will be held an international exposition on the shores of the great harbor under the auspices of the Jamestown Exposition Company, a company chartered by the State of Virginia for the purpose of holding an exposition for celebrating this greatest event in American history. Accident of location placed upon the people of Virginia the duty of inaugurating this celebration. They took up the burden of the responsibility as a sacred duty, not because it was alone their beginning; it was the beginning of the nation. From Jamestown grew Virginia, from Virginia grew the nation. Each State ought to feel the same sense of duty, each Representative the same feeling of responsibility as the Representatives from the Old Dominion. Virginia, with her share of the responsibility and because the place of celebration was within her borders, took up the work, and the old State, out of her limited means, has appropriated the sum of $300,000, and her citizens, among whom there are few rich, subscribed one million and a quarter. Is it asking too much that this great nation, sprung from the small beginning at Jamestown, should in its turn pay a part of the expense of celebrating this event in a proper way?

The bill of last winter provided that the navies of the world should be invited to rendezvous in Hampton Roads during the time of this exposition. That foreign governments should be invited to send representatives of their armies, and to have such portions of our Army and Navy assembled there as was not incompatible with the public service. Mr. Chairman, the soldiers will be there; the ships, with their officers and sailors, will be there, and our invited guests will expect entertainment in its fullest sense—conveniences, amusement, and instruction. The people of the United States will insist that the celebration be held in such a manner as will reflect the greatest credit on the country, and that the entertainment should be such as to make American hospitality proverbial.

It is a condition that confronts us. We, as representatives of the nation, invited the world to be our guests to view and participate with us in this birthday party. We have made them the guests of the nation. It is too late to talk of economy. We must do one of two things: We must repeal the bill of last winter; we must withdraw our invitations, already accepted, and explain that we were too niggardly or too poor to take care of them. To let them come and not properly provide for them would be to prove unworthy of the patriotic people we represent; would be to be neglectful of the dignity and credit of the country. If we do not repeal the bill of last winter and cancel our invitations, then we must pass a bill to carry into effect the intent of the law of last winter, and in doing this the committee have reported a bill which may be divided into two parts—Government participation and Government aid to the exposition. The Government has decided to participate; the only question then is, How far shall this participation go? There are some things in the line of participation that are absolutely necessary and authorized by existing law. First, the bill provides that to the end that communication between the ships and the shore may be free and ready and that there may be a safe landing place for the small craft used to convey the soldiers and exposition visitors from the grounds to the fleet and to convey the officers and men from the ships to the shore there shall be constructed two piers extending from the exposition grounds out into the waters of Hampton Roads, thus forming a basin or harbor which will accommodate boats drawing 10 feet of water. The Secretaries of War and the Navy both testified that this was a necessity; that without it there would be great danger and inconvenience in landing and embarking. These piers are to be surmounted by two towers and connected with an arch, the towers to be used, if practicable, for exhibiting the Light-House Service and wireless telegraphy, the piers and towers to be illumined by the exposition company. At Buffalo the electric tower, at St. Louis the water tower, so at Jamestown the piers and towers will be made things of special attractiveness and beauty. Out on Hampton Roads, in front of the exposition grounds, will ride the battle ships of all nations met in friendly rivalry. Could we afford to make these piers cheap and unsightly? The law of 1905, assembling the fleets and the people, is incomplete, ineffective, unless these piers are built and an appropriation for the purpose is authorized. The amount proposed is the estimate made by the Engineering Department of the Army, the Department of Yards and Docks of the Navy, and the engineer of the Jamestown Exposition Company.

The assembling of the soldiers and sailors of our own and foreign nations will bring together a great number of men of both services, and the appropriation provided in the bill of last winter is insufficient to properly entertain our guests. Entertainment does not mean alone dinners and receptions. We would deserve the criticism that would be ours if we stopped at that to truly carry out the signification of the term; there must be feasting and music; there must be social and fraternal communing and commingling; there must be comfort, convenience, amusement, and instruction; there must be a place for the meeting and commingling of the two branches of the services, for the soldiers and sailors of our Government to meet and fraternize with the men of the nations that have accepted our invitation. Further, the appropriation in the bill passed last session provides for the entertainment of the commissioned officers only. Did Congress intend that? What of the men behind the guns? Is not the man on the forecastle, the warrant and petty officers a part of the naval representation of foreign governments? Was it not the intent of Congress in passing the bill of March 3 to offer entertainment to all our naval and military guests?

Therefore, to carry out the intent of the bill already passed, it is necessary, in the opinion of the committee, to provide further entertainment for our guests, and to that end they have provided that a clubhouse or rendezvous to cost $75,000 be erected for the use of the enlisted men, and a similar building to cost $50,000 be erected for the use of the officers.

The committee was of the further opinion that to properly carry out the existing law and offer instruction as a part of the entertainment, it should be provided that the Government shall, from its executive department, exhibit such articles and material as illustrate the functions and administrative faculty of the Government in time of peace, and its resources as a war power. Such Government exhibits shall include the Life-Saving Service, the Revenue-Cutter Service, the Army and Navy, the Light-House Service, the wireless-telegraph service, and the Bureau of Fisheries. The Tercentennial Commission, created by act of March 3, 1905, composed of the Secretaries of the Treasury, War, and Navy, shall have charge of the selection, purchase transportation, safe keeping and return of said Government exhibit, and for this purpose $200,000 is provided. This was regarded so clearly as a part of the necessary entertainment of our guests at an exposition, and authorized by the existing law, that in addition to the exhibit, they made an appropriation of $250,000 to erect the necessary buildings to house and display the said exhibit. These two items are clearly and properly connected with the entertainment of our guests, but even if this were not true, would it be just to deny to this celebration what you have heretofore extended to all the expositions held in this country?

The bill heretofore passed provided for the commemoration of this event by appropriating $50,000 for the erection of a monument on the site of the settlement of Jamestown Island. To provide a means of landing the workmen and material and that the public may have free and ready access to the island, $15,000 was provided to build a wharf on land to be donated by the Society for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities. To afford proper conveniences for the visitors to the island the sum of $10,000 is appropriated for retiring rooms, drinking water, policing, benches, and other accommodations, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War. The act authorizing the assembling of such portions of our Army for participation in the celebration as was not incompatible with the public service failed to provide any fund for the transportation of the necessary arms and men, making it absolutely necessary to provide for it in this bill. The Secretary of War testified that $200,000 was required for the purpose. The committee recommended that an appropriation of $100,000 be made. A military exposition without the military would be an absurdity.

Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for a direct appropriation in aid of the Jamestown Exposition Company, as has been made by Congress for all of the international expositions. There seemed to the committee strong reasons why this aid should be extended. The naval and military features suggested by the Government and ratified by the Congress of the United States, while welcomed by the exposition company as one of the most attractive of its features, will entail upon it very large expenses. The foreign vessels and military contingent which come will be technically the guests of the nation, yet they will share equally with our people on the grounds of the exposition company in the comforts and conveniences which will arise from the preparation of the grounds, in the laying out of the streets, in the sewerage and water plants, and in the enjoyment of all those pleasures and conveniences which will come from the erection of the light, heat, and motor plants, which will entail enormous expense upon the exposition company, and if the nation's guests are to enjoy in common with others the advantages and conveniences which the company shall inaugurate, it is not improper, but just, that the Government which has invited them should share a portion of this burden. To this end your committee have recommended an appropriation of $250,000 directly to the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition Company. This appropriation is so necessary to properly help entertain the guests of the nation for the reasons I have above stated that it can very properly be considered as carrying out the law of March 3, 1905, and therefore authorized by it.

One hundred thousand dollars is appropriated in aid of the Negro Development and Exposition of the United States of America, to enable it to make a showing of the progress of the negro race in this country at said exposition, and provision is made for the proper and safe mode of the expenditure of said sum. The bill provides also that no liability of the power of the United States Government shall exist for any debt or obligation incurred by any of the boards of commission or any person or persons whatsoever in excess of appropriations by this act authorized.

The United States Government is exempted by the bill from all liability for any of the acts, doings, or representations of the Jamestown Exposition Company, its officers, employees, etc.

The Jamestown Tercentennial Commission are required at the close of the exposition to make a complete report of their actions, and a complete statement of all expenditures for the purposes herein specified, to the President of the United States for transmission to Congress.

Mr. Chairman, divested even of the sentimental and patriotic reasons for the celebration by this nation of the first permanent settlement of English-speaking people in America, there are other potent reasons why a liberal appropriation for participation in and in aid of this exposition should be made by Congress.

A great many bills have been introduced in this Congress looking to the upbuilding of the merchant marine and the commerce of this country. What better object lesson could there be—what better chance to draw comparisons—than to have the merchant marine of the nations of the world participating in this celebration?

The bill just passed by the House provides for an increase of the Navy. Every session of Congress we vote large sums of money for this purpose and for the maintenance of the Navy. Here at this exposition, where will be gathered the navies of the world in a great peace congress, the people who foot the bill will have an opportunity to be informed and to judge for themselves, and be put in a position to impress upon their Representatives their opinion of what should be the policy of the United States on the question of a large navy. I believe it will result in great good to the Navy to have the people of the country better informed on this subject.

The objection has been raised that this celebration comes too soon after the one held at St. Louis.

Mr. Chairman, we live in a wonderful age of inventive genius and advancement in the mechanical arts. So fast does one marvel of invention follow another that if yearly expositions were held in some city of this country each succeeding year would bring its own new and useful inventions to help enrich the world. No longer than this week the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service told me that his department had several new inventions that they would exhibit for the first time at this exposition. So fast has history moved that even before this event can be celebrated the relative importance as a world power of some of the nations participating may be changed. Since the celebration at St. Louis, the last international exposition, the United States has begun a great international work that makes for the prosperity and welfare of the commerce of all nations. If we have become a great world power, we have also become a great world benefactor, and it seems to me a proper time to hold a great international celebration and a proper time for the navy and the merchant marine of other nations to come and do us honor. I believe some recognition of this event should and will be made in the celebration about to be held. Expositions are great industrial, historical, and commercial universities, in which the humblest citizen may have a chance to receive enlightenment and instruction in the progress and upbuilding of his country, and to obtain that knowledge and attainment in the arts, in science, commercial and industrial development which creates that incentive and opportunity for genius to create and perpetuate the industrial and commercial ascendency of America over the nations of the earth.

There are still stronger reasons why this bill should pass. The President of the United States, inspired by patriotic sentiment, recommended in his message to Congress that a proper celebration of this event should be held, and in response to that recommendation and the sentiment that inspired it, Congress passed the act of March 3, 1905, and authorized him to issue the invitation on behalf of the nation, which he did, through the Department of State. When Congress assembled this winter, recognizing that the compromise bill which was passed the last day of the previous session was inadequate, did not provide the means of carrying out its own provisions, his message to the present Congress called attention of Congress to the necessity of further legislation, and recommended in his vigorous style that the needed help be given. I quote in part:

> I earnestly hope that this celebration, already indorsed by the Congress of the United States, and by the legislatures of sixteen States since the action of Congress, will receive such additional aid at your hands as will make it worthy of the great event it is intended to celebrate, and thereby enable the Government of the United States to make provision for the exhibition of its own resources, and likewise enable our people who have undertaken the work of such a celebration to provide suitable and proper entertainment and instruction in the historic events of our country for all who may visit the exposition and to whom we have tendered our hospitality.

Thus showing by his language that the present law in his opinion fell short of affording that sort of entertainment, which, as host, it was our duty to offer our guests.

The report of your Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions shows conclusively, in their opinion, the necessity of further legislation. The five gentlemen who have signed the minority report used this significant language:

> One argument brought forward produced an effect in the minds of the minority, namely, the suggestion that the act of March 3, 1905, provided inadequately for the entertainment and diversion of the foreign visitors invited by the President in conformity with the will of Congress.

And to show that they, too, are convinced that more legislation is necessary, they say it over their signatures that the entertainment provided is not full and complete, and further say:

> If it appears that foreign nations are to send representatives to such a number as to tax our resources for their entertainment or diversion aboard ship or on shore, ample time will exist to remedy this circumstance by action in the next session of Congress. The minority, however, was by no means convinced that such an exigency is likely to arise.

Mr. Chairman, any unbiased investigation will convince the most skeptical that the acceptances already received meet the suggestion made by them. There will not be time after the next session of Congress for legislation then enacted to be effective. The items proposed in this bill which your committee recommended as necessary could not be completed by April 26, 1907, the day the exposition opens its doors to the world.

No one can plead that the bill of last winter was the end of legislation on the subject. We all know that it takes not thousands but millions to hold an exposition, and the language of the former bill shows that the appropriation to carry out the object authorized was partial and not complete.
